7 B.C. Airports Fail Fire-Fighting Rules

VANCOUVER (CP) — Seven airports in British Columbia do not meet fire suppression standards set by the Ministry of Transport.

Leading the list is Cranbrook, where the recent inquest into the Feb. 11 Pacific Western Airlines crash which claimed 43 lives focussed attention on the fire suppression services available at similar airports around B.C.

The six other airports which do not meet minimum MoT standards are Campbell River, Penticton, Terrace, Castlegar, Dawson Creek and Quesnel.

An MoT spokesman said Thursday that much of the problem can be traced to delays of up to five years in obtaining sophisticated foam firetrucks capable of battling large blazes which generally accompany a major airplane crash.

"Trucks we ordered five years ago have yet to be delivered," the spokesman said. "There was a design problem with the big 60,000-pound foam trucks — they kept blowing their brake-drums and there were problems with the suspension and the drive chain."

One B.C. airport now is using a 28-year-old foam truck as the fire chief awaits delivery of a new truck.

The coroner's jury at the Cranbrook inquest heard testimony from airport fire chief George Grimstad that he regarded fire protection at his airport totally inadequate to deal with a major crash. He was a one-man fire department at an airport that required 11 full-time firemen, according to MoT rules.

Grimstad had only a small dry chemical truck, which he said was next to useless in battling a major fire such as the 737 blaze, when 26,000 pounds of volatile aviation fuel spilled from the ruptured tanks of the Boeing 737.

It took firemen 70 minutes to get their equipment in to battle the blaze, in the snow 500 yards off the end of the runway. Grimstad said that in the intervening hour he fought the fire with handfuls of snow.

Instrument Flight Rules and Visual Flight Rules regulations define Cranbrook as a Class D airport because it handles in excess of 150 aircraft movements a month of planes weighing 60,000 pounds or more. The rules say Class D airports must have three firefighters on duty at any time, plus one response truck and a foam truck.

Cranbrook's hours of operations run through two shifts and weekends as well, requiring a minimum of 11 firemen, but Grimstad is the only one the airport has. The airport got a foam truck a year after the MoT promised it would arrive and three months after the PWA crash.

Wayne d'Easum, city administrator for Dawson Creek, said in an interview that the airport has no firemen, no part-time firemen, no trucks and just one jeep.

"Once it gets there, we have two fire extinguishers, an axe and maybe two pairs of boots," d'Easum said. "We have two jets a day in and out of the airport and we need better than this."

Neale To Coach Canucks

VANCOUVER (CP) — Harry Neale, who had a winning record in six World Hockey Association seasons, today was named coach of Vancouver Canucks, notorious losers in the National Hockey League.

Neale, 41, signed a three-year agreement with the NHL team after securing his release from New England Whalers of the WHA. Neale had one year remaining on his WHA contract.

He becomes the sixth Vancouver coach as the Canucks prepare for their ninth season in the NHL. Orland Kurtenbach was fired as coach by general manager Jake Milford last month after Vancouver missed the Smythe Division playoffs for the second straight year.

"We've been watching Harry Neale for months and we've had good reports on him," Milford said. "He runs a tight ship and has a winning record."

Tories Charge Cabinet Letter Cover-Up

OTTAWA (CP) — The government refused today to make public a letter in which a former national revenue minister said he believed the RCMP was acting illegally in using confidential tax information for criminal investigations.

The letter was referred to briefly Thursday by John Sopinka, counsel to a royal commission on RCMP wrongdoing, as government lawyers fought to keep the commission from making it public.

"Why cover up if you have nothing to cover up?" former prime minister John Diefenbaker said in the Commons as Government House Leader Allan MacEachen resisted opposition efforts to have the government table the letter.

MacEachen said that tabling the letter would interfere with the work of the royal commission.

But Conservative Leader Joe Clark said the government is using the royal commission as a cover-up.

MacEachen said government lawyers assured cabinet that the secret 1972 agreement—it gave Mounties access to confidential tax information— is legal. Its legality has been questioned by Sopinka at commission hearings this week. Outside the House, MacEachen said he was not sure, but that he thought government law officers ruled it legal when the agreement was made in 1972.

Sopinka didn't name the author. But the only reference this week before the royal commission to cabinet correspondence came Wednesday as he tried to question a witness about a May 10, 1976, letter from Bud Cullen, then revenue minister, to Warren Allmand, then solicitor-general.

That letter was written as Alberta Attorney-General Jim Foster ordered a royal commission inquiry into the handling of a police investigation, involving the RCMP and the revenue department, into corruption and other offences connected with a midway show operation that had been raided by police in 1975 in Edmonton.

The Alberta inquiry later turned up evidence of a secret 1972 agreement under which the RCMP had been given access to confidential tax files of figures involved in organized crime. The inquiry has been told by tax officials that investigators went beyond the terms of the agreement, whose legality itself has been questioned in sessions of the federal royal commission here.

Clark asked MacEachen

Suffocate Arms Race - Trudeau

NEW YORK (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said today the world must try to halt development of nuclear weapons—such as the so-called neutron bomb—in the laboratory.

He told the special United Nations session on disarmament that President Carter was farsighted in his decision to postpone production of the controversial neutron bomb.

"We must all hope that the response of the Soviet Union will be such as to make it possible to extend that postponement indefinitely."

Trudeau, making his first UN speech as prime minister, outlined steps which he said could halt the nuclear arms race and control the conventional arms trade.

This would dampen the "escalating balance of terror" which is consuming almost $400 billion a year in arms expenditures, the prime minister said.

Trudeau said the world must try to suffocate the nuclear arms race.

"The ultimate intent of a strategy of suffocation is to halt the arms race in the laboratory," the prime minister said.

"But an offer to halt the arms race at any stage is a step in the direction of genuine disarmament.

"The president of the United States has shown the way in recent weeks with his far-sighted postponement of a decision to produce a special battlefield nuclear weapon."

The prime minister was referring to Carter's recent decision to defer production of the neutron bomb, hoping the Soviet Union will make arms concessions.

Trudeau did not state whether Canada favors the U.S. producing and deploying the weapon if the Soviet response is not considered satisfactory.

The prime minister also suggested that regional groups, such as Latin American countries, might agree to control the build-up of conventional arms and reduce international tensions.

Trudeau said a decision by most Latin American countries and major world powers to declare Latin America a nuclear weapon-free zone is an example of what he means.

Trudeau carefully tied disarmament to national security. Disarmament makes sense only if nations feel secure. So it is useless to make grand declarations without being able to follow them up, he said.

Canada and other Western countries attending the special session have in the past rejected proposals of "instant disarmament" as impractical. The Western powers say that disarmament must be accomplished in stages.

HARNESS MEET OKd

Attorney-General Garde Gardom announced today a 57-day harness racing season at Sandown race track in Sidney.

Gardom said the season, which runs June 3-Sept. 9, will create about 200 full or part-time jobs and he predicted that 60 per cent of the horses racing in the first season will be Canadian owned.

Arson Cited In Blaze

Arson is suspected in Thursday's fire that caused $150,000 damage to offices in the Town and Country Shopping Centre.

A Saanich police said today firemen discovered signs fire had been set in three separate locations inside the gutted offices of a law firm headed by lawyer Gary Tindall.

Fire officials are still uncertain how the fires were was started and have found no evidence that a flammable liquid was used.

There is no evidence the offices were broken into. When firemen arrived they had to break down a locked door to get in.

Jabour Wins Round

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Supreme Court issued an order Thursday preventing the Law Society of B.C. from sentencing North Vancouver lawyer Donald Jabour for conduct unbecoming a member of the society.

A committee of the society convicted Jabour earlier this week and recommended that he be suspended from the society for six months.

Justice R. P. Anderson granted Jabour's request for a temporary injunction to delay sentencing until the court can rule on Jabour's claim that the federal Combines Investigation Act prevents the society from banning advertising.

Jabour's lawyer, Bryan Williams, said the trial would likely take place in November.

Jabour has agreed not to advertise his legal clinic before the trial starts.

Justice Anderson said that all B.C. lawyers are still barred from advertising—at least until the trial is finished.

Meanwhile, Tory leader Vic Stephens is trying a new tactic to introduce advertising in the legal profession.

In the legislature Thursday, he introduced an amendment to the Legal Profession Act that would prevent the Law Society from making rules governing advertising by lawyers.

Stephens, a lawyer himself, has been fighting for the right to advertise by members of the profession.

Before he was elected to the legislature in March, he was censured by the Law Society for advertising his store-front law offices in Vancouver.

TALL SHIPS SHRINK

The number of tall ships definitely coming to Victoria in July has fallen to two and it looks as if they will not be racing against each other, Captain Cook Bicentennial Committee chairman Ed Sweeney said today.

The only two tall ships confirmed are the Osprey from Japan and the Eagle from the U.S.

Sweeney said the Osprey may step down a class and race from Hawaii against three class B vessels, the Oriole, the Lady Frei of San Francisco and possibly the Safari, also from the U.S.

Sweeney said the committee hopes to get a third tall ship, the Yankee Clipper, to make an appearance here in mid-July.

Sweeney said the emphasis now would be on the idea of a visit rather than a race.

CUPW Can be Sued

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec Court of Appeal upheld Thursday the principle that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) may be held responsible for damages caused to third parties during an illegal postal strike.

The three-judge panel of the court confirmed a 1975 ruling by a Quebec provincial court judge in Sherbrooke awarding $1,000 to Santana Inc., a shoe manufacturing company, against the CUPW.

Mr. Justice Rodolphe Pare, who wrote the principal notes to the judgment, wholly rejected the union's contention that its sole obligation was to furnish service to the Treasury Board and that it had no responsibility to any third party, in this case the shoe manufacturing firm.

In its claim, Santana said its business volume dropped to $85,520 in April, 1974, from $185,765 the month earlier because of lost orders caused by an illegal 16-day work stoppage in April by the postal workers.

The justices said the strike was in violation of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and constituted an offence punishable by summary conviction as well as a civil wrong under the Quebec Civil Code.

As a result, Mr. Justice Pare said, the government and citizens have equal recourse against the CUPW for any direct damages resulting from illegal suspension of postal service.

Vancouver Drivers Raked

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police say that Vancouver motorists are developing the Big City Syndrome — bad manners, recklessness and contempt for those who prefer two feet to four wheels.

Officials add that what once was known as the city with the most courteous motorists in North America is fast becoming just another place to burn rubber and beat the other guy through the traffic light.

"I've been a traffic cop here for 31 years and I can see a big change for the worse in our traffic manners," says Corporal Don Brown, Vancouver City Police special events co-ordinator.

"We are losing our leisurely pace," he says. "We should try to preserve it before it disappears altogether."

Last year, 526 pedestrians were struck by cars — 323 of them in crosswalks.

Because of motorists' deteriorating driving habits, police are starting a traffic-awareness program for pedestrians of all ages — particularly the elderly.

Starting in the fall when the evenings start getting darker, police will launch a Step Lightly program for seniors, says McLarty. "Last year 15 persons aged 60 and over were killed by cars."

One reason for the high traffic fatality rate among the elderly is the dark clothing they wear, he says.

To combat this, police will give talks and "we will issue them with clear plastic sparkle tags to wear on a cord around their necks if they go out at night," Brown says.

"The tags light up at night and can be seen for quite a distance."

The $5,000 cost of the tags will be met in part by the Police Foundation.

7 Airports Fail Fire Rules

Castlegar airport manager John Michelson said he has only one full-time fireman and five auxiliary firemen — airport employees who have received some training in fire suppression — and a dry chemical truck.

"We're not satisfied — we're supposed to have a foam truck but we're still waiting," Michelson said.

"We're seriously undermanned. We've been putting pressure on MoT; we think we need at least eight full-time fire staff to handle our three scheduled jets a day."

Penticton airport has nine full-time firemen, a foam truck and a dry-chemical truck, but it is still two firemen short of MoT standards.

Campbell River airport manager Pete Frumento said the five on staff at the airport are trained as firemen, but there are no full-time firemen.

Bill Mitchell, manager of the Terrace airport, said there are eight full-time firemen based at the airport and foam and dry-chemical trucks. However, one of the trucks is a small model instead of medium-sized as called for under the regulations.

Also in the wake of the Cranbrook inquest, planes flying into B.C. airports without control towers have been ordered to report their position five minutes before touchdown.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa, Transport Minister Otto Lang said Friday a deficiency rating given Mirabel airport, near Montreal, is "a relative thing" and added that Canada has achieved "about the safest civil aviation system in the world."

He was replying in the Commons to Don Mazankowski, Conservative transport spokesman, who asked about the deficiency rating given the Montreal airport by the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations.

The pilots were critical of Mirabel because they said there is an inadequate ambulance response there.

COVERUP CHARGED

whether there was a letter in 1976 contending that "the agreement broke the law" and what the resolution was. The government didn't confirm until last Sept. 29 that the agreement existed.

MacEachen said the matter is before the royal commission and the government doesn't intend to "replace the work of the royal commission." If the letter was to be made public, the royal commission should do it.

(At the royal commission, Allan Lutfy, lawyer representing solicitors-general, objected to publication of the letter on grounds of cabinet privilege and castigated Sopinka for referring to its contends publicly.)

Clark said the government is "expanding" the mandate of the royal commission "to cover up activities of the government." The point was that a cabinet minister two years ago had said that a practice approved by the cabinet in 1972 was against the law.

"Now that surely, if the cabinet of Canada is condoning and accepting breaking of the law of Canada, is a matter for the House of Commons to inquire into," Clark maintained.

"Was there an expression by a minister that an agreement sanctioned by the government of Canada was in violation of a law of Canada?"

Clark also asked whether it continued to be the policy of the government to support the breaking of the law of Canada; The 1972 agreement is still in effect.

MacEachen said Clark was drawing unwarranted conclusions. The government didn't want to impede the work of the royal commission.

NDP Leader Ed Broadbent said that if MacEachen was interested in the truth, "instead of obscuring it," he would make the letter public. The issue was cabinet responsibility and it was a matter for the Commons.

Broadbent asked whether the cabinet approved the agreement in 1972 and whether it had a legal opinion from the justice department stating that the agreement was legal.

MacEachen replied that law officers of the Crown have advised the government that the agreement is legal. He said the matter was approved by the cabinet in 1972 and there was no evidence it was illegal.

Broadbent then asked him to reconsider and make the letter public so the Commons could judge.

MacEachen said it would be "dangerous" to produce "one single element" in the evidence.

"If the letter is relevant it ought to be considered in the over-all context of the evidence."

Carter Pushes Test Ban

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite the objections of U.S. military leaders and atomic energy officials, President Jimmy Carter has decided to ask the Soviet Union to agree to a ban on almost all testing of nuclear weapons, according to the New York Times.

In a report from Washington, The Times quotes administration officials as saying U.S. negotiators have been instructed to seek an accord with the Soviet Union in which all nuclear testing would be stopped for five years, with only a narrow range of laboratory experiments exempted from the ban.

Hinting that discussions on a nuclear test ban were already under way, Vice-President Walter Mondale told the United Nations disarmament session Thursday that an agreement will be completed "before too long."

Until last November the Soviet Union appeared reluctant to prohibit underground tests for peaceful purposes, but more recently has indicated that it is ready to see such testing suspended.

The Times says the decision was reached May 20 and appeared to end debate over the administration's policy of trying to get a prohibition against nuclear testing.

Meanwhile, at the UN today, the Soviet Union accused the U. S. of "harping on the myths" of Soviet military threat and demanded a clear American answer to a Soviet-bloc proposal to ban production of the neutron bomb.

In a speech to the UN General Assembly's special session on disarmament, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said neutron weapons "must be banned once and for all." He called the American-developed weapon "a particularly vicious and cruel means of mass destruction, intended specially to annihilate all things living."

Gromkyo had indicated before the speech that he would make a major issue of the neutron weapon, bringing this response from James Leonard, a U.S. delegate to the session:

"As far as we are concerned, we've dealt with this question. The president has decided not to build it, at least for the time being, and it's up to the Soviets to show some comparable measure of restraint on their side."

Family Businessses To Receive Tax Break

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will amend federal income tax laws to permit the tax-free transfer of small business holdings from a parent to a child or grandchild.

In a joint announcement from Finance Minister Jean Chretien and Tony Abbott, small business minister, the government said the tax change is effective immediately.

Basically, the new rules will allow a deferral of up to $200,000 in capital gains when shares of an incorporated small business are transferred between generations of a family. It applies whether the shares are transferred during the taxpayer's lifetime or at death.

Finance officials emphasized that the amendment to the Income Tax Act is not an exemption from capital gains tax. Gains will be taxed in the hands of the children or grandchildren of any subsequent sale of the shares.

The federal initiative won an enthusiastic response from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Patricia Johnston, research director for the small business group, predicted a "dramatic effect" on small business because it will reduce pressures to sell out to foreign interests.

Fish Talks Begin Today

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — U.S. and Canadian negotiators meet in Washington on today to discuss a coastal fishing dispute that threatens to disrupt relations between the countries.

Unless agreement is reached on a fishing pact, U.S. fishermen might barred from Canadian waters and Canadians might no longer be able to fish in U.S. waters, Doug Marshall, an aide to the chief U.S. negotiator, said Thursday.

the weather

A strong westerly flow is now well established across the Pacific with the main part of the stream crossing southern B.C. and the northern states. A succession of minor disturbances caught in this circulation are moving eastward at about 40 knots over the Pacific and will slow down to about 20 near the coast. The resultant weather will be mainly cloudy skies and periods of rain on the coast with less activity in the Interior due to the drying effect of the western mountains. Daytime temperatures which have been considerably below normal in parts of the Interior lately will show a slight upward trend.

Swiftsure Entrants Jam Harbor

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Some of North America's best-known racing boats will be jammed in the Inner Harbor tonight on the eve of the largest Swiftsure sailing classic in history.

At last count a total of 370 boats were registered in the Swiftsure and Juan de Fuca classics compared to 327 in 1977.

Among those vying for top honors in the Pacific west coast's most prestigous race will be the internationally-known Windward Passage, the 73-foot ketch belonging to Chris Johnson of the New York Yacht Club.

This will be her first racing event since returning from Tokyo.

Two ultra-light displacement boats, Doug Fryer's 67-foot sloop Merlin and the 69-foot Drifter are expected to produce a fine showing.

They are the latest in ocean racers and their speed potential is so great the handicap rules had to be altered for the Los Angeles-Honolulu race, the record for which is held by Merlin.

Drifter is jointly owned by Ron Hunt, Dick Warren and Drifter Hui of the Lahaina Yacht Club. General race committee chairman Frank Piddington reports they were so keen each of them filed separate registrations for the race. Another entry from Lahaina will be Thomas A. Clark's 51-foot ketch Jenoyce.

One of the world's top sailors, Paul Elvstrom, has been drawn to this year's event. He will be skippering Arrow of the Seattle Yacht Club.

Another boat to watch will be Langdon Hendrick's 50-foot cutter Warrior, which won both the Southern Straits and Great Equalizer races. Bob Smith's 46-foot Warlock of the Tacoma Yacht Club is another hot contender.

Veteran Swiftsure campaigner Henry Kotkins of Seattle will be racing his 73-foot yawl Diamond Head once more. To add to the spirit of the occasion, Diamond Head will provide some onshore celebration by conducting a Miss Swiftsure contest.

Local boats competing in Swiftsure include Tom Loney's Goodbye, George Stricker's Servus, Hugh Porter's Errigal, Greg Oliver's The Distant Drummer, Bob Hosie's Meg and Sea Dance. Sea Dance belongs to Joe Isherwood and this will be her first race. She will be skippered by J.P. Le Dallic.

While most of the crews will be taking it easy on tonight in preparation for the testimng ahead, the Causeway will be jammed with spectators eyeballing one of the most expensive collection of floating real estate ever to gather in one place.

The Country Band will provide music on the Causeway and the Rainbow Royal Canadian Sea Cadet Corps will perform the traditional Sunset Ceremony on the lawns of the Parliament Building.

The first Swiftsure start for International Offshore Rule boats will be at 9 a.m. Saturday off the Victoria coastline in the area of Brotchie Ledge.

The start line will be nearly a mile long to accommodate the large entry. At each end of the line will be the Canadian armed forces' Porte de la Reine and the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Point Bennett.

Fifteen minutes later Pacific Handicap Racimg Fleet boats in Swiftsure will get their start. At similar intervals IOR and PHRF boats racing the smaller Juan de Fuca will get their starts.

The Swiftsure boats will sail a 136.2-mile course to the Swiftsure Bank, 15 miles out in the Pacific, and back, rounding the Porte de la Reine at the outer mark.

The 75.6-mile Juan de Fuca race is to Clallam Bay on the Washington side of the strait and back, the rounding point being the armed forces' YMT 10 (yard maintenance tender).

For the seventh year Bob Smith's Scot Free and Gerry Williams' Shelimar of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club will be patrolling the course and helping to track the progress of the competitors.

Other power vessels on patrol will be Dick Alexander's Lady Diane, Stu Vinnals' Temerarie and Paul Stenner's Pacific Pilot 5.

If prevailing winds are blowing the leg home to Victoria should have the two fleets racing back with spinnakers, bloopers and stay sails flying. If the winds are brisk the first Swiftsure boats should cross the finosh line near the Ogden Point breakwater early Sunday.

The Swiftsure Bank is named for the old sailing vessel HMS Swiftsure which first came to Victoria in April, 1883. While on duty on this coast she reported a sounding of 20 fathoms in the position which now bears her name.

Four boats took part in the first Swiftsure, sailed in 1930. Roy Cooke's Claribel of Seattle was the winner. Barney Johnson of the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club helming his Westward Ho to second spot. After them came Bill Hedley's Sinbad and Fritz Helenthal's Gwendolyn I, both of Seattle.

MAYOR CHARGED WITH DOUBLE-DEALING

Saanich Police Appealing to LRB

In an unprecedented move, members of the Saanich policemen's union, infuriated over a breakdown in the settlement for a new two-year contract, have voted non-confidence in Saanich police board chairman Mayor Mel Couvelier.

The vote was taken at a special meeting Thursday night attended by 64 of the 114 members of the union.

Union president Phil Jamieson charged Couvelier with "double-dealings" and said the police board has reneged on a agreement over a cost-of-living allowance.

The union has filed notice with the Labor Relations Board and seeks an order directing the police board to execute the agreement reached.

Couvelier, not bothered by the vote of non confidence, said in an interview he welcomes the opportunity to present the board's case to the LRB.

"Jamieson has threatened all sorts of things," the mayor said. "But as far as we (the board) are concerned we have an agreement, a contract is in force. The men cannot legally strike."

The problem, he said, lies in the interpretation of how a cost-of-living allowance should be applied.

Jamieson said the union holds that in their agreement with the board reached on May 12 the cost-of-living factor would be incorporated into the base salary rate.

However, Couvelier said it was never the board's intention that should happen. Rather, he said, the board interpreted the agreement to mean the cost-of-living allowance would be simply an extra allowance to be paid in addition to salary if the Consumer Price Index should rise above five per cent next year.

What it boils down to, the mayor said, is a difference of opinion as to what the base salary rate should be in January 1980, when the current agreement expires.

Jamieson said if the board gets its way and the cost of living soars in 1979, the union members stand to face a reduction in salary.

"We'd be going backwards instead of forwards" he said. "No union in its right mind would accept such a proposal."

Jamieson said the first inkling he got that the board was about to renege on the agreement was during a meeting with Saanich municipal personnel manager Art Wilkes on Tuesday when the two got together to review the contract language. He said his fears were confirmed the next day when Wilkes showed him a draft of the agreement dealing with the cost-of-living allowance.

The draft said only a COLA "may" be paid, not "shall" as the union had expected. In addition the draft said calculation of the COLA would be paid only on regular hours worked — not on the base salary as union members had bargained for — and would not be applied retroactively in the event a retroactive adjustment is made by Statistics Canada to the Consumer Price Index — another inconsistency with the original agreement the union thought they had reached with the board.

Jamieson noted the union ratified the agreement with the board on the strength of a May 12 letter from Couvelier wherein the mayor said the board agreed to pay a cost-of-living allowance in 1979 triggered at five per cent and calculated quarterly retroactively to the beginning of the quarter.

Couvelier then went on to say all other items outlined in the board's May 5 proposal would apply.

In that proposal, the board agreed to adjust salaries according to the cost-of-living increase. No mention was made of the COLA being a separate allowance.

Couvelier concluded his May 12 letter with the comment that "our willingness to consider a COLA for 1979 should in no way be construed as applying to future contracts."

Couvelier told the Times that statement alone should have clearly indicated to the union the board's position

Peace with Honor

The Law Society of B.C. has clearly chosen its course as far as the controversial issue of lawyers' advertising is concerned.

A three-man committee of the Benchers, the society's governing body, has recommended a stiff penalty against Don Jabour, the North Vancouver lawyer who brought a test case against the rules prohibiting advertising by hanging a neon sign outside his law office and sticking a couple of advertisements in the newspapers. The recommended penalty of a six-month suspension plus a requirement to pay all costs of the case is the equivalent of an ordinary worker being suspended for six months without pay and is normally reserved by the Benchers for relatively serious offences.

At the same time the Benchers have announced their intention to fight every step of the way the efforts of the federal Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to find out whether the Law Society's ban on advertising violates the federal Combines Investigation Act. They have already begun a case in B.C. Supreme Court, asking the court to rule that it does not come under the jurisdiction of the federal act.

The society may be able to win these battles. The courts may agree that it is not covered by the federal law and that it has the right to discipline Jabour for the offence known as "conduct unbecoming" to a lawyer.

But what the Benchers have apparently not realized is that it is now impossible for them to win the war. They may have legal right on their side under current law, but they have lost almost all public support. The tiny army of Benchers cannot hope to win for long on a battlefield on which it is entirely surrounded by the hostile forces of the public, particularly when, as is currently happening, more and more of their own troops — the ordinary lawyers of the province, especially the younger ones — are deserting to the other side.

In fighting the battle so hard, in trying to prevent any federal intervention, in emphasizing deterrence in meting out punishment to Jabour, the Benchers are not gaining anything. They are merely postponing the inevitable. At the same time, their attitude seems to be prompting more and more people to join the war on the other side.

So far the provincial government has adopted a strict hands-off policy. But if the public pressure to allow advertising continues and if Ottawa finds it impossible to take any action, it will be only a matter of time before the politicians give in and impose upon the lawyers the requirement to allow advertising.

This would undoubtedly be the poorest way to solve the problem, from the viewpoint of both the lawyers and the public. Advertising allowed reluctantly because the law says it must be is not likely to be the best possible source of information for potential clients of law firms. At the same time, the lawyers, themselves know best of all the pitfalls that could arise from advertising and would surely be in a better position than the government to draw up the necessary controls for the advertising program.

There is no doubt that there are pitfalls, and much careful work needs to be done in working out an advertising code to overcome them. If the Benchers were to go so far as to begin work on that code, to co-operate with the federal government in its examination of the issue, and to agree that once the problems were worked out advertising could begin, they would do much to increase the public's confidence in the legal system.

By doing so, they could find peace with honor, rather than the ignominious defeat they will otherwise almost certainly meet.

One-Man Caucuses

B.C. Conservative leader Vic Stephens is obviously speaking from self-interest when he tells the Eckhardt commission on electoral reform that parties with only one member in the Legislature ought to retain their current status as full parties, complete with offices, secretaries, and a small research staff. After all, if Eckhardt recommends that a party is required to have three or five members to keep its status, Stephens, a one-man caucus, will suffer greatly.

But even recognizing that, it seems that Stephens makes some powerful arguments for retention of party status by the one-man groups. He noted that in the 1975 election, the two one-member parties, the Liberals and Tories, ended up with 142,000 votes, or about 10 per cent of the votes cast. If representation was made strictly on the basis of that popular vote, the two would between them have five or six seats.

That can't happen under a constituency system, but it would seem unfair that those 142,000 voters would have the parties of their choice downgraded to the same status as independents that belong to no party at all.

B.C. is not yet a complete two-party state, and electoral reform should not be used to try to make it one.

Good News and Bad News

HALIFAX — In mid-June, the freezer trawler Herwig, gross weight about 3,000 tons, will slip out of the West German port of Bremerhaven and then plough the 8,000 miles or so to Argentina. Several months later, her holds filled with hake and squid and whiting harvested from the Patagonia shelf, the Herwig will travel back the length of the Atlantic to Bremerhaven.

Most of the good economic news, and most of the bad economic news, for the four Atlantic provinces, are summed up by that voyage.

It is bad that the West Germans can do it — can send, profitably, its trawlers as far away as Argentina and South West Africa — while the fishing industry of our Atlantic Provinces can only compete in its own home waters on the basis of protective quotas.

No Choice

It is good that the West Germans, and the East Germans and British and Poles and Russians now have no choice but to do it — send their trawlers scouring the ocean in search of fish while Canada builds up its fishing industry behind the diplomatic barrier of the 200-mile limit.

In a way, the most interesting event at a two-day conference on the economy of the Atlantic Provinces, organized by the Financial Post last week, was a non-event. No one complained — about Confederation, about Upper Canada, about Ottawa. Even the three premiers (P.E.I.'s Alex Campbell couldn't make it), let slip by the chance for some ritual "fed bashing."

Unquestionably, the Atlantic Provinces have recently been given reasons to complain. The Herman Kahn Institute, in its report on Canada's prospects, declared that "nobody seems to have any sort of favorable projection for these provinces." Judith Maxwell of the C.D. Howe Research Institute warned last month that the "social contract of Confederation" is being divided into "two solitudes" composed respectively of the five lagging eastern provinces (Quebec included) and the five leap-frogging western ones (Ontario included). "High oil prices are widening the gap," said Maxwell, "while Ottawa no longer possesses the financial power to close it."

Perhaps the 200-odd Atlantic businessmen and government officials who attended the Halifax conference were just whistling in the fog. If so, they were, at least, and for a change, whistling confidently.

The prospect that history may repeat itself is the reason for the sudden spring of confidence down east. Until Confederation, the Atlantic Provinces prospered on fish and on free trade. Now both may be coming back.

By 1985, said Donald Patton, director of Halifax's Centre for International Business Studies, the fishing industry if properly managed could provide an additional 18,000 direct and indirect jobs. By then, exports of fish, at $1.6 billion in today's dollars, could rival those of wheat.

How best to get the fishing industry from here to there provoked the liveliest debate of the conference. Bill Morrow, president of National Sea Products of Halifax, complained that federal Fishery Minister Romeo Leblanc had "pooh-poohed" the eastern provinces' proposal for a $900 million program to upgrade and replace the fishing fleet. In reply, federal fisheries official David McEachran pointed out that today's fleet was already five times the size of that of 15 years ago yet was harvesting a catch only four-fifths as large. Further expansion would lead to over-capacity, and it in turn to overfishing.

On free trade, all were as one. "There is an irresistable trend in the western world toward freer trade," said Nova Scotia Premier Gerald Regan. "This can bring nothing but good to coastal states which depend upon international trade."

"The Atlantic Provinces," said Regan, "do not believe in tariffs for the very simple reason that we get no benefits from them." In support, New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield pledged to "exert all the influence I possess to counter any retreat into protectionism," while Newfoundland Premier Frank Moores warned that "tariff concessions, and to get them we'll have to be prepared to give, are going to be the key to opening up European markets for our fish."

Want Free Trade

Amid all this good news came, inevitably, the bad news. The Atlantic Provinces, remarked Regan, always had welcomed foreign investment because it opened up new international markets, for fish, for pulp and paper, for minerals, instead of, as was the case with Canadian businessmen, just servicing a captive Canadian market. Now that fish and free trade were opening up a new future for the Atlantic Provinces, said Regan, "I predict, sadly, that Canadian business will not seize these opportunities but that, once again, we're going to have to turn to foreign investment."

The kind of foreign investment, indeed, that can turn a profit by sending a trawler from Germany to Argentina's Patagonian Shelf, and which, unless and until Canada learns how to compete, could more easily and more profitably send it from Germany to our Grand Banks and Scotia Shelf.

FRED CLEVERLEY

A New Car Insurance Idea

WINNIPEG — If the New Democratic Party is ever returned to power, most Manitoba motorists could find themselves paying for their automobile insurance at the gas pumps, at the rate of about 20 cents a gallon, without annual premiums, policies or all the red tape connected with private or public insurance companies as they are known today.

A hint of this possibility came during the examination of the Manitoba Public Insurance Corp.'s annual report by members of the Manitoba legislature's public utilities committee.

The suggestion came from Sidney Green, who has often been mentioned as a possible leader of the NDP if former premier Ed Schreyer should leave provincial politics. Although Green was a member of the provincial cabinet that established compulsory automobile insurance in Manitoba in 1971, his frank views on financing were kept mostly covered during the time he was in office, when his words could be interpreted as government policy.

20 Cents Enough

Now in opposition, Green put forward his personal suggestion of financing government insurance almost entirely through a special tax on gasoline. Since one cent of such a tax produces about $3.5 million a year in revenue, according to the experience of the Manitoba scheme during the time a special two-cent tax was imposed (since removed by the new government), Green said that a 20-cent tax could produce enough revenue to run the insurance scheme.

If such a program was put in place, the 90 per cent of Manitoba motorists who had not come to the attention of either the Motor Vehicles Branch or the public insurance corporation because of their driving records or accident frequency would receive no insurance applications, policies or any documentation regarding insurance other than the purchase of their annual licence plate.

The bad drivers, and those with frequent accidents, would be treated separately, and assessed additional amounts, but experience has shown that these make up only 10 per cent of the total drivers.

Government members of the committee, anxious to promote the announced intention of Premier Sterling Lyon to allow private competition back into the automobile insurance plan, argued against the gasoline financing. George Minaker said it would be unfair to the good driver who had to put many miles a year on the road. Green replied that some might suffer, but the majority would benefit.

The general manager of the Manitoba Public Insurance Corp., James Dutton, who was hired by the former government, but who is now trying to fit the compulsory plan into the new government's policies, mentioned that such a move would be breaking entirely new insurance ground, and would have no pattern of experience anywhere to follow. He said that operators of heavy machinery, which sometimes incurred large claims could get away lightly under the gasoline financing proposal.

Green said the heavy machinery operators could be allowed only a basic coverage for their gasoline premiums, and could be charged extra. Green said he would not care a whit for the operators of luxury cars, who might also suffer.

SIDNEY GREEN

Green was not challenged on the possibility that gasoline financing of insurance would spread the cost on those who did not drive at all, but who bought goods and services whose insurance costs would be passed on in the price of these goods.

Nor was he challenged on the opportunity gasoline financing would afford to hide true insurance costs. A motorist who gets an annual insurance premium knows what his insurance costs, but few would be able to sort out insurance costs from the many other taxes already assessed to gasoline. Again, it would be the oil companies, and not the government insurance plan, who would bear the blame for the cost increases every time insurance surcharges were increased.

The suggestion by Green left some Manitobans wondering whether he intended to expand his scheme to allow for fire and general insurance costs on houses to be placed on the cost of fuel and electricity used by these houses.

But it is certain that Green is serious in his suggestions, and that if the time comes when the New Democratic Party has the opportunity to revamp the compulsory government automobile insurance plan in Manitoba, Green will argue strongly for the financing of such insurance through a levy on gasoline used.

One of Green's stronger arguments is based on economics. A gasoline-financed automobile insurance plan, he says, could do without the mass of bureaucracy necessary for a conventional plan.

This was an unusual argument for Green to advance during a time when his party is attacking the present provincial government for cutting down the civil service.

The present minister responsible, Harry Enns, rose to the defence of those who would be fired, taking an unusual position himself in the light of the 1,300 jobs that had been cut from the provincial payroll during the last six months.

Two-Way Street

"If they are unproductive, fire them," Green said.

"It won't come out that way in the press," Enns replied.

"That's your problem," shot back Green.

Green has already served notice that he will personally act to evict any private insurance company that attempts to set up business in Manitoba if the Lyon government allows private competition with the government plan.

In Green's words, "they (the insurance companies) will discover that the road between Toronto and Winnipeg is a two way street, and that the costs of moving to Manitoba will be doubled by the costs of moving out if we are again elected to govern."

The NDP effectively drove private insurance companies out of Manitoba, including the two Manitoba-based giants of the auto and home insurance industry, Wawanesa Mutual and Portage la Prairie Mutual. Neither of these two companies now sees fit to write the extension automobile coverage they are allowed under the present scheme, leaving Royal Insurance with the bulk of the private extension load.

Manitoba got compulsory automobile insurance under the NDP, and if the party is returned, Manitoba may get the innovative financing proposed by that party's main opposition spokesman.

Not Socialist

Canada's alleged socialist party was in conclave over the Victoria Day weekend. They were in the hundreds, committed people, expending time and probable expense to journey from various parts of the province, to attend the NDP convention.

Sunday afternoon the radicals proposed nationalization of B.C. Tel, obviously believing that state-run industry is socialism, and this 76 years after the B.C. Conservative Party voted for the same reform in the interest of capitalism, at a convention in Revelstoke. The belief in such wonders and in "welfare" exploitation in general spawns a further spiritual nursery, a political spectrum peopled on the left by such visionaries, trusting that society can be changed for the good of all by tinkering with effects.

No matter that the productive means in the form of capital crosses borders to the places where tribute is highest, like Colombia's billion dollar plus production and sale of marijuana, cocaine and coffee while children in that country starve. Or the global destruction of food generally, while an average of 35,000 children die daily of disease and malnutrition.

A scattering of Trident submarine base protesters were in evidence too, oblivious to their support of a system that produces goods for sale, thereby generating international conflict over markets, resources, and the waste of $45 million per hour in arms production.

Various Bolshevik splinters decorated the doorstep, urging the faithful to dot the i's and cross the t's of capitalism their way. All this since the reforms of the Regina Manifesto have been of the fabric of current capitalist society. Though the workers own no country, an additional link of their mental chain graced the front of the convention platform, a Canadian flag.

But all is not lost. Some of the delegates who were handed a Socialist Party of Canada leaflet which asked, "Is the NDP a Socialist Party?" replied: "Well, that's a good question." — J. G. Jenkins, 1090 Lodge Avenue.

Not Second Class

As a student I must support the stand of B.C. unions to oppose attempts by the B.C. government and municipalities to treat students as second-class workers. The governments are trying to employ students in union areas at minimum or near minimum wage; this is clearly unfair to both the student and the other workers. The days of cheap labor based on race are over and the exploitation of women in the labor force is also fortunately lessening. So now the government has discovered that students are an unrecognized and largely unorganized class that can be underpaid with impunity. What could possibly make a worker who has spent the last eight months in school worth less on entering the labor force than, say, one who had spent the last eight months on unemployment insurance? Educating brain cells does not weaken muscle tissue.

In times of economic trouble it is particularly unfair to lay the burden on the students by making them accept lower wages than other workers when it is considered that they only have four months to earn enough to live for a full year. Students voluntarily accept a very modest life style but to force artificially low wages on them means that they will have to make up the difference by assuming the burden of large student loans just to survive.

I might suggest that the bureaucrats who run this summer student employment scheme contemplate paying tuition, buying books and living for 12 months on about $2,400.

The unions have been made to seem the villain of the piece by denying students their "right" to these jobs, but they accept a responsibility to the needs of the students to earn something. They are usually willing to allow lower wages than their contract but can only go so far.

Don't forget that if the province or city freely signs a collective agreement that states that a worker is entitled to a certain salary level, then any worker, black, white, male, female, and yes, even a student, is entitled to that wage. It is the employer breaking the contract, not the union.

Unions have fought for decades in this country and have won rights for and increased the standard of living for all workers, unionized or not. Times of high unemployment are traditionally times of union-busting and attempts to roll back hard-won gains. I find it despicable that it is the governments who are taking advantage of the times to undermine the role of the union in protecting all workers by attempting to separate an unorganized and undefended group — students — from protected status in the eyes of the rest of the labor force on the basis of education. — Ian McAllister, Vice-President, Alma Mater Society, University of Victoria.

Forestry Act Favors Firms

THE SUN
An Editorial

Over the past 40 years changes in all aspects of forestry have been rapid and sophisticated with one notable exception: the legislation governing forestry practice.

That changed Friday with the introduction of Forests Minister Tom Waterland's new Forest Act and the Ministry of Forests Act, a comprehensive new look at the province's needs focussing on what is, for the provincial government, a refreshing insistence on conservation and good management.

There is an abundance of progressive reforms in the clearly-written acts, including provision for public hearings before some new timber licences are granted, innovative appeal procedures, decentralized forest administration and, tentatively, the idea that recreational and industrial uses of forests can be made compatible.

Inventory

The new acts also straighten out the responsibilities of both government and industry with regard to forest management — obliging industry in many cases to prove the social, environmental and management benefits of its operations and giving government the right to specify areas from which timber will be harvested in tree-farm licence areas, and to approve management and working plans.

The government's determination to do better in its role as supervisor of the province's forest resource is evident in the new requirement that it submit at 10-year intervals an exhaustive inventory of range and forest resources, descriptions of government programs at all levels in forestry, and an analysis of economic and market trends and public policy.

Hand in hand with this is a requirement that the government submit by Sept. 30, 1979 a five-year program presenting alternatives for re-stocking forest land and an estimate of the expenditures, direct and indirect social and economic costs and benefits associated with each alternative.

This goal, if it can be achieved, will take the forest service to dizzying new heights of knowledge. At the moment no one knows even how much logged-over land needs replanting, much less what kind of replanting is needed.

But while the provincial government has set such ambitious goals for itself — goals that will require monumental effort by existing staff, or a vastly increased staff — it has been more lenient than it need have been to industry.

As under the old forestry legislation, company expenses for reforestation — and expenses for logging and access — will be offset against stumpage charges. Added to that are new incentives in the form of increased timber rights available to companies that effectively practise silviculture, in essence a kind of double payment for good management practices.

A more fundamental shortcoming in the new legislation — and one that directly counters the advice of economist Peter Pearse, whose forestry commission recommended much of the new act — is that the act may well fail to reduce forest industry concentration by failing to provide regular competitive granting of timber rights.

The new act rids the system of the old perpetual rights, but provides what may, in fact, amount to the same thing. Without having to compete, holders of these rights can have them effectively replaced by the government as long as they are fulfilling the government's conditions. This gives the government considerable leverage, but the same standards could be enforced better by somebody breathing over the big companies' shoulders.

Competitive

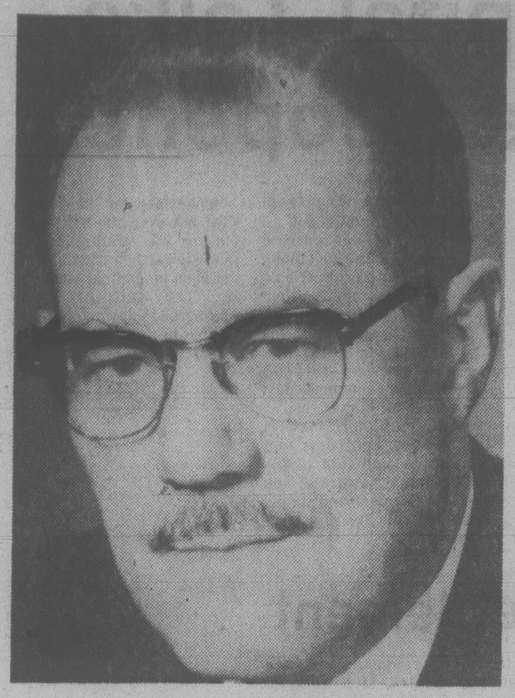
The government has chosen the competitive approach for dealing with small companies which have been provided — as Mr. Pearse recommended — with a special category, timber sale licences that, as it turns out, are the only licences that will be renewed after competition.

The government, of course, need not replace old licences with new ones if it believes that forest management would be better served by refusing the replacement.

But, like many other sections in the new act — the environmental standards, for instance — much will depend on the government's willingness and ability to use the new tools now being fashioned.

But the act is clear and well-written. The obvious intention is to improve forestry practice in the province.

The need to do so — to take care of the resource that supports the province's biggest industry — is manifest.



MONTEITH . . . six forgettable years

Social Policy not for Tories

By LEONARD SHIFRIN

OTTAWA — Anyone here remember J. Waldo Monteith?

That's what I thought.

The second longest serving (after Paul Martin) Minister of National Health and Welfare ever, Monteith's tenure — from 1957 to 1963 — has been so thoroughly forgotten, no doubt, mainly because it was so utterly unmemorable.

The entirety of social policy in the Diefenbaker era consisted of increasing the old age pension (which wasn't indexed in those days) on the eve of each election. In all other respects social issues were deemed not to exist, and the minister of health and welfare maintained a profile about as high as those of the incumbents in National Revenue and Veterans' Affairs.

When this month's Gallup Poll brought the startling news that a federal election held today would be as likely to produce a Conservative as a Liberal administration, each of us had his or her own private reactions.

Mine was to think of J. Waldo Monteith.

Would a Joe Clark government be as oblivious of social policy concerns as that in which Monteith served so invisibly?

Maybe yes and maybe no . . . but more likely yes.

When Joe Clark queried Health and Welfare Minister Monique Begin in the Commons recently, she prefaced her reply by noting: "I am not accustomed to receiving questions from the Honorable Leader of the Opposition because he does not talk much about social policy."

In the leadership race Joe Clark campaigned as a Red Tory, endorsing the concept of a guaranteed income and claiming to have a plan to make family allowances selective in favor of lower-income households.

Since then he has withdrawn his support of a guaranteed income and said not a word about any family allowance plan.

Silence is the traditonal Conservative position on social issues. The P.C. caucus, split between hidebound reactionaries and so-called Red Tories, regularly agrees only on the need to avoid taking sides on such questions in the interests of party unity.

For most of the current Parliament, the chief Conservative spokesman on social policy was Hamilton's Lincoln Alexander, whose ability to be emphatically non-committal — to pour forth righteous indignation while sitting on the fence — was a wonder to behold.

Perhaps Alexander's bravado performance became a little too notorious as, to borrow Shakespeare's phrase, "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing", because last year he was replaced by Newfoundland's James McGrath.

McGrath exudes an Atlantic populist ire whether the subject is inflation, unemployment or whatever.

His solutions, though — which he says are Conservative party policy but "always subject to review" — are rather less populist.

Mortgages

In response to the most recent unemployment figures, for example, he proposed to stimulate the economy by offering partial tax deductibility for interest payments on home mortgages. Specifically, that portion of the interest over eight per cent, to a maximum of $1,000, would be deductible.

Quite apart from whether this measure — which would cost the treasury several hundred million dollars in lost tax revenue — would provide its money's worth in stimulus, there are a number of things clearly wrong with it from an equity standpoint.

The most obvious is that it would provide no benefits to tenants — who comprise the bulk of the lower-income half of the population.

But even among homeowners, the benefits would be most inequitably distributed.

Those with high incomes and big homes (and, hence, large mortgages and high marginal tax rates) would save three or four times as much as median income earners with average-size homes.

Rare query

By being specific enough for its flaws to be revealed, the Conservatives' mortgage interest proposal is an exception to their usual rule.

More typical is their position on the Spouse's Allowance — a subject to which they devoted an opposition day in the Commons last month, and which occasioned Joe Clark's rare query of Monique Begin.

The Conservatives are opposed to this income-tested payment to 60-to-64-year-old spouses of pensioners being terminated on the pensioners' death.

Are they in favor of it being extended to those in the same age group who were less than 60 when their spouses (pensioner or otherwise) died, I asked McGrath? Are they for or against its being extended, on the same income-tested basis, to those in this age group who never married?

What, in the Conservative view, would be a reasonable income support program for this sub-pensioner group, I wanted to know.

The party had no position, I was told, on any of those questions. The whole matter was "under continuing review."

What came to mind was Peter Ustinov's characterization of the United Nations ambassador from a non-aligned country who announces: "My government votes neither aye nor nay, but this is nowise to be taken as an abstention."

Alaska: Appalachia North?

By COLMAN McCARTHY
Washington Post

When Michael Holloway, M.D., left his village the other day in the Rainbow Valley of Alaska to visit the nation's capital to see the political system at work, he had visions that it might not work at all. Holloway's concern was whether or not Congress understood the feelings of the natives in bush Alaska and their ties to a subsistence culture. The physician's own understanding is based on his work since 1973 as an orthopedic surgeon with the Indian Health Service. By travelling among the remote villages, he has learned that subsistence uses of natural resources — game, fish, vegetation — have been the means of survival for people in that area for at least 15,000 years.

After a few days in Washington, Holloway felt some of his misgivings ease. As passed by the House Interior Committee, the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act offered strong protection for the subsistence rights for natives. But other actions of the committee were troubling. As originally introduced, the bill sought to protect 115 million acres of public land; the committee approved 95 million. For one area — the Tongass forest — more than half of the wilderness proposals were rejected. Overall, wilderness acreage dropped from 83 million to 75 million.

Land bills in Congress almost always begin that way; big hunks of largess inviting axmen and whittlers to chip away until often the public is left with litt]e more than fragments. Despite early vigilance by the Interior subcommittee, the legislation must still pass through the full House and then a Senate committee and the full Senate. It isn't only the secretary of interior who says the Alaskan land issue is his department's major priority for 1978. The stakes are also awesomely high for natives, developers, energy and timber companies, unions, tourists, conservationists and state and federal governments. The collision of values among those groups will create big winners and big losers. Debate comes when national concern about Alaska runs strong. One book on the state (Coming Into the Country, by John McPhee) is on the best-seller lists and another (Children of Crisis, by Robert Coles, which examines Eskimo culture) deserves to be.

Whether this attention from writers is a final glance at a land and culture about to be ruined in the name of progress or a protective look at a long-ignored treasure, 1978 will be known as the year when the great shift came to the great frontier.

In deciding the fate of 95 million acres of public land, Congress isn't getting into an issue for which we have no precedent. Today's Alaska flashes with similarities to the Appalachia of 100 years ago; in size, natural beauty, the pride and resilience of the native people, mineral wealth and cultural traditions. But are axmen and whittlers who are preparing to chop up the Alaska legislation in the Senate about to create Appalachia North? With the current conditions in Appalachia well-known — 50,000 miles of despoiled rivers and streams, mountains raped for coal, inadequate housing, impoverished schools, an epidemic of mental depression, absentee landlords, constant flooding, trailer-camp living, hazardous roads — what are the ethics of risking a repetition in Alaska?

In the fever for quick wealth, the real costs are likely to be ignored. The exploiters of oil, gas, copper, uranium, timber, real estate and wildlife are not likely to heed a woman in the Eskimo village of Kotzebue who told some visiting congressmen last summer: "We find ourselves being encroached upon by another dominant culture, whose people are more numerous than we, relentless, whose written laws are sometimes foreign to us and inappropriate for this simple northern land but nevertheless binding on us."

With the full House about to debate Alaska, the same philosophy of exploitation that has done in much of Appalachia will be heard again: The fate of the hemisphere depends on our getting at every last acre that can be drilled, mined, paved, blasted, staked or sold.

To resist that mentality, or better yet to turn away from it as false, nothing is more useful than a look at Appalachia. If Alaska's public lands are a new territory, then they deserve to be cherished with something better than the old ethic.

Dumping on California

russell baker

David Eisenhower, grandson to one president, son-in-law to another, deserves to be listened to when he talks politics. This is why it is surprising to read that he believes hostile feelings toward former President Nixon reflected a broad American dislike of California, Nixon's native state.

It is even more surprising to find the distinguished social philosopher, Art Buchwald, in agreement. Although not so well connected in the family way as Eisenhower, Buchwald has spent most of his golden years in Washington dozing over after-dinner brandy with sages from every corner of the continent and presumably has his finger on the national pulse, low though it may be flickering when he counts it.

Far be it from me to contest with thinkers of this weight, but I confess that, until they spoke, I had been firmly persuaded that California was the one, the only section of the United States that nobody in the country disliked.

Oh, admittedly a handful of New York intellectuals like Woody Allen and S. J. Perelman have put the knife from time to time into the subcutaneous fat of the Golden State. Allen has asserted that the only cultural advantage of California is "that you can make a right turn on a red light." And Perelman has pointed out that Los Angeles is the only city in the country where you can see a man being tried for committing a human sacrifice on the street corner — without a licence.

These small churlishnesses, however, seem inspired only by their authors' abrasive experiences with the creative minds peculiar to the Los Angeles entertainment society. Behind them, one feels, lie temperaments prepared to go just as gooey as a Nebraska hired hand's at the thought of fog on San Francisco Bay, three cars in every garage at Laguna and pansy beds at Disneyland in the dismal March.

In fact, one of the most pleasant attractions of California has been its singular freedom from the regional paranoia which afflicts almost everyplace else. New York City firmly believes it is hated, not only throughout the country, but even in Albany. Albany believes it is looked down upon by New York City.

Buffalo thinks everybody is laughing at it and hates it when the news wires carry the annual winter reports about moose roaming the thoroughfares.

Southerners feel unjustly abused by the North and the North feels unjustly drained of its tax wherewithal so the South can eat high on the hog. The Deep South feels misunderstood by the Shallow South. South Florida feels victimized by North Florida.

Chicago thinks New York is sneering at it. Texas suspects everybody else is making fun of it for being rich and wearing ten-gallon hats and going around with gusto. Washington thinks everybody is against it because nobody understands it.

The Middle West feels it is shunned, sneered at and ignored by both coasts, but especially the East. In Colorado people complain that nobody from the East understands them, and when you ask them what the East is, they say Ohio. New Englanders spend their endless winter nights laconically suspecting that the rest of the country is out to isolate them.

Indeed, each of these places does come in for enough abuse from other regions to lend a thin layer of reality to the paranoia. But not California. California seems to be the one place nobody ever speaks of. California is the one place every other American you meet would like to move to, if only for a vacation.

Nor are Californians themselves visibly suffering from the notion that they have enemies beyond the Sierras. Those whom I meet on native territory usually assume I am envious of their good luck in habitat and, after establishing that it is impossible for me to move out there, try to soften the pain of my misfortune with sumptuous entertainment.

This makes it one of the more pleasurable places in the world to visit, unlike New York where one must assure the natives that he loves it right down to its potholes, or Charleston where he must insist that bygone racism doesn't trouble him a bit, or Texas where he must dilate on his respect for big gestures, open hearts and loud cars before he can be established as an object fit for hospitality.

And so Eisenhower's conclusion that hostility toward Nixon reflected hostility toward California confuses me. I had always assumed that the hostilities toward Nixon were carefully cultivated by Nixon himself to build a loyal constituency of followers who loved him because he made the right enemies.

Even in California he was no great favorite. They voted to send him cross-country to Washington, to be sure, but in 1962, when asked to keep him in Sacramento, they elected the other fellow governor.

Hospital Talks To Be Reopened

VANCOUVER (CP) — A three-man arbitration board headed by Prince George lawyer Allan Hope decided Wednesday to reopen its hearing to bring down a binding contract for about 20,000 members of the Hospital Employees Union (HEU).

The Health Labor Relations Association (HLRA), representing 120 public hospitals throughout B.C., applied for the new sessions after the board produced a draft of its proposals which exceeded the terms worked out by another board dealing with 12,500 members of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C.

The differences caused concern and confusion among hospital employers and nurses because of the effect on established relationships.

The two boards were the first named under the new Essential Services Disputes Act. HLRA announced last week that the nurses' board, chaired by Victoria lawyer Ian Stewart, had come to a unanimous decision to impose a binding award of four per cent this year and six per cent next year for registered nurses.

Spokesmen for the nurses, said, however, the HLRA disclosure was premature and that Stewart's award has not yet been made final and binding. They said this board had agreed in principle to the terms but other considerations were to be discussed.

BEER UNION PUTS A CAP ON TALKS

VANCOUVER (CP) — A labor dispute in the British Columbia beer industry reached an impasse Wednesday over the appointment of a mediator.

Eric J. Harris, spokesman for the newly-formed Brewery Employers' Labor Relations Association, announced that government mediator Charles Stewart had been appointed to bring about a settlement.

John Langley of the Brewery Workers Union said, however, the union opposes the appointment and has filed a complaint with the B.C. Labor Relations Board.

QUESNEL (CP) — A tentative agreement has been reached between this Interior town and its 35 civic workers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The one-year contract is retroactive to Jan. 1. It calls for an increase of four per cent or 50 dollars, whichever is greatest.

Union members and city council are both scheduled to vote on the contract at meetings Monday.

AWARD LOST

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Court of Appeal Wednesday reversed an award of damages to a law student who was injured when his bicycle struck a pothole on Marine Drive in North Vancouver.

The B.C. Supreme Court had awarded Robert Clark Barratt $1,590 for injuries he received.

Justice A. Bruce Robertson said he could not agree with the conclusion by the Supreme Court judge. "The fact that potholes were forming all the time did not itself constitute an actual danger," he said, adding that the actual danger was the unusually large pothole filled with rain water.

Logging Feared

An organization seeking protective status for the Southern Moresby Wilderness Area (SMWA) on the Queen Charlotte Islands has urged the government to take quick action to head of logging operations.

In a letter to members of the legislature, the Islands Protection Committee warned the Moresby area is at a critical stage.

The committee asked the government to act quickly to preserve the region, claiming that logging operations are already stripping timber on the region's boundaries.

Forest Bill Critics Predict Disaster

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

A spokesman for an association opposed to recent changes in the Forest Act says Forest Minister Tom Waterland's new piece of legislation could be heading the province towards economic disaster.

Paul George, of the Coalition for Responsible Forest Legislation, said in a recent interview that Waterland's Forest Act is designed for short-term economic gain and that in the long run it means an increasingly rapid decline of B.C.'s forest resource.

"Flying saucers aren't going to drop out of the sky in 20 or 30 years and save us," said George. "We have to take care of this ourselves."

He said that one of the major faults with Bill 14 is that it does away with the concept of sustained yield.

In a brief delivered to the provincial government earlier this week the coalition said it can only be viewed as tragic that the new act does not even define the words sustained yield and has abandoned this concept in favor of short-term development. A long-enshrined and central forestry principle, sustained yield means that a forest is managed so that it can be harvested continually and in perpetuity.

George said that in enlightened countries forests are harvested on an even flow basis, to provide stable employment and a stable forest economy.

He said Waterland's legislation, however, puts the stress on social and economic needs rather than biological factors.

The coalition brief contains a cartoon showing Waterland telling a tree to grow faster in order to solve the dwindling wood supply.

States the brief: "At present the B.C. forests are being harvested on a declining flow schedule. This means that when the old growth is gone, the second crop will be smaller by 30 per cent on the average. All too soon we will have what the old foresters called timber famine.

"There is no free lunch in the forest. But the companies are going to be allowed to take one at the expense of the future."

The brief states that the new Forest Act encourages the rapid liquidation of remaining virgin stands in the province in the anticipation that new techniques for growing trees will yield an improved second crop.

George said there is mounting scientific evidence that such a policy is unwise.

The coalition also attacks the act for allowing existing tree farm licences to be renewed without any public hearings, and for setting out that employees of the forests ministry can be fired for divulging specified information to the public.

. . . Loggers Upset

The B.C. Independent Logging Association is extremely disappointed in the main legislative proposals contained in the new Forest Act, association spokesman Colin Fraser said Thursday.

"This bill, if it passes through the legislature in its present form and with its present intent, effectively emasculates small business and free enterprise in the forest industry in British Columbia," Fraser said in a news release.

He said the bill replaces contract rules with legislative rules and leaves the independent industry with no rights and no recognition.

Fraser, the association's executive representative here, said that unless the legislation is substantially altered, the whole of this province's timber and forest industries will be tied up by large, and in many cases, international corporations within the next decade.

Under the legislation, he said, small businesses would have nothing left but the "token timber" of the Timber Sale License "thrown out to silence opposition to the most lavish giveaway in this province's history."

TIRE TEST MULLED

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Research Council will investigate the complaints of a man who thinks his Firestone 500 radial tire blew out because of design and manufacturing defects.

Robert Watt, 35, of Vancouver, says he recently was driving a borrowed station wagon at about 80 kilometres an hour on the Trans-Canada Highway when the tire blew.

Watt says he treated the blowout as an ordinary occurrence until he read a news story about a United States government investigation of Firestone tires.

Marian Oversby, head of B.C. Research's traffic accident research unit, said Tuesday that if the complaint is valid she will send the tire for testing to the Transport Canada research station in Ottawa.

The Victoria Firestone distributor says he has no instructions received from company about the tire, but is contacting them to see if they plan any action.

Spirit Dancing Halt Urged

CHILLIWACK (CP) — The ancient Indian custom of spirit dancing should be banned at the Skulkayn longhouse until band leaders can solve problems which led to the death Dec. 21 of Elliott Henry, 28, an inquest jury recommended Thursday.

The jury ruled that Henry's death — the third in recent years among spirit dancing initiates — was unnatural and due to misadventure.

Henry died from a pulmonary embolism (blood or fat clots in the lungs) and cardiac arrest following his initiation as a spirit dancer at the longhouse near this Fraser Valley community.

"There is a concern by the jury as to the knowledge in spirit power of Skulkayn longhouse initiators of the way in which an initiation should be carried out," said the jury in their written statement.

Jurors recommended initiations be stopped until consultations have been made with other longhouse leaders and elders of the Indian community, and that native people publicize the fact that the ritual dance is a spiritual belief and not a cure for social problems.

The jury, in recognition of the deep-seated cultural aspect of spirit dancing, did not suggest government involvement in the ritual.

Jeffery Point, leader of the longhouse, said later the band would discuss the specific techniques of the Skulkayn ceremony with other Indian leaders throughout the province before initiations begin next winter.

Dr. Norman Todd, Henry's physician, and an expert on Indian spirit dancing, told the inquest earlier Thursday that 80 per cent of the Indians who have gone through the ceremony have at least temporarily solved their problems.

Hydro Talks Back

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro has disputed charges by the executive director of the B.C. Wildlife Federation that Hydro and the provincial government are hiding from the public a giant make-work power construction strategy for B.C.

Charles W. Nash, Hydro general manager for corporate affairs, has written a letter to the editors of all B.C. newspapers in which he denies the suggestion by Bill Otway.

Nash's letter does not reply directly to Otway's claim, made at a federation convention May 14, that Hydro and the provincial government have a master plan to develop more power to attract industry even though such new power facilities are not based on present needs.

"This runaway obsession with power development also looks like a giant make-work project in the absence of employment increases created by the private sector," Otway said.

Nash said that it has "always been B.C. Hydro's job to anticipate electricity needs for the province and to develop whatever energy resources will best meet public demand — technically, environmentally and socially."

"If the provincial government is attempting to attract new economic activity to B.C. and fails to do so because there is insufficient developed power available for new industry, Hydro has not done its job," Nash wrote.

"There is no secret grand strategy invo.ved."

PROXY FIGHT FLARING AGAIN

Kennecott Victory Claim Hollow?

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite Kennecott Copper Corp.'s victory claim in its proxy fight with Curtiss-Wright Corp., the complex six-month battle for control of the largest U.S. copper producer is not yet over and actually could begin all over again.

Don Slocum, a Curtiss-Wright spokesman, said Thursday the company's strategy would be to blame its apparent proxy-fight loss on an 11th-hour decision by a U.S. district judge.

"Kennecott's claim of victory is based on a swing of 800,000 votes and we can pick two vote changes that took place on Monday that could account for almost all of those votes," Slocum said.

Ruling a day before Kennecott's annual meeting May 2, U.S. District Judge Lloyd MacMahon agreed with Kennecott's claim Curtiss-Wright's takeover bid was conducted illegally. MacMahon blocked the board of directors election scheduled to take place at the meeting.

But his ruling was stayed by an appeals court just moments before the meeting was to begin, and stockholders were allowed to vote on whether Kennecott's entire 17-member board should be replaced by a slate linked to Curtiss-Wright.

The appeals court ordered the election's results be held in abeyance until it ruled on whether MacMahon's decision should be overturned. The next hearing in the case is scheduled for June 19.

"If we win the appeal, then we would look for some sort of relief and that could be a resolicitation," Slocum said. A resolicitation of proxies would mean renewed charges and counter-charges between the two companies and a new election.

At stake is control of a corporate giant, but one which managed to earn only $297,000 on sales of $925 million last year after two straight years of losses.

Roland Berner, chairman of Curtiss-Wright and one of the insurgents listed on the proposed new board for Kennecott, has accused Kennecott chairman Frank Milliken and his other top managers of incompetence.

Scotiabank

Bank of Nova Scotia had balance of revenue of $69 million for the six months ended April 30, an 11.2-per-cent increase since the same date a year ago.

The bank also announced that per-share earnings increased to $1.67 from $1.50.

Total assets were $24 billion at April 30, an increase of 18.4 per cent. However, the bank said much of this increase was a result of the lower value of the Canadian dollar.

5 FOUND GUILTY OF $4M SWINDLE

LONDON (Reuter) — Five men were convicted here today of an international fraud scheme said to be so vast that it might have undermined the world's banking system.

The five were part of a London-based gang whch forged bank drafts and used them with forged identity documents to swindle banks, companies and individuals out of millions of dollars.

Among their victims were the Union Bank of Switzerland, the Toronto Dominion Bank, the Bank of Montreal, the United Bank of Kuwait and Chase Manhattan in New York.

The five are to be sentenced May 31.

More than 40 banks were said to have been defrauded before Scotland Yard's serious crimes squad, after monitoring the gang's movements across three continents, raided several houses in London in August, 1976.

Forged bank drafts with a face value of $9 million were found together with stolen airline tickets, false passports and visas, and "official" stamps from the London embassies of the United States, Saudi Arabia, Argentina, Colombia and Ecuador.

Police estimate that the gang netted about $4 million.

Wild Beauty Checks Out

Deputy Minister of Recreation and Conservation Lloyd Brooks doesn't believe in hearsay.

For years he has been hearing of the wild beauty of three Nitinat lakes proposed for inclusion in Pacific Rim National Park, but which the province has delayed handing over to Parks Canada.

He decided to go and see the lakes — Hobitan, Squalicum and Tsusiat — for himself.

The three lakes are adjacent to the West Coast Trail, about half way between Port Renfrew and Bamfield.

The 58-year-old deputy minister, accompanied by five friends, pulled his canoe up Hobitan creek, sometimes wading waist deep in the fast running water.

The exploratory trip satisfied him that it's a "most interesting and attractive wilderness area."

He was impressed with some of the cedar trees.

"Some are as big as you will ever find in the province," he said. "They're giants — museum pieces."

He said the some of the cedars are so big that he doubted they could ever be be logged.

"If felled, they would break into pieces."

He was also impressed with the wild flowers he saw around Squalicum Lake, especially the purple marsh azalea which forms a lush border in places on the edge of the lake.

"It's an area which has remained unchanged for hundreds of years," the minister said, "and it's only a day's drive from Victoria."

What surprised the deputy minister was the number of canoeists on the lakes. He had expected to find only a few campers in the area for this time of the year.

"We expected to have the lakes more or less to ourselves," he said. "But we estimated there must have been at least 20 canoes on the lakes."

Some attractive primitive campsites have been established around the lakes, he said.

He was pleased, he added, to see they were kept clean. There no signs of litter, indicating that most canoeists packed their garbage out.

"But as more and more canoeists visit the lakes, it will be necessary to establish sanitary facilities," he said. "This may eventually become a problem."

Brooks has no idea when the lakes will be designated as federal parklands.

NDP APOLOGY FOR $25-A-JOB BID

TORONTO (CP) — A spokesman for the federal New Democratic Party said Thursday the party has sent a letter of apology to 200 persons who were asked to contribute at least $25 to the party if the NDP appointed them enumerators in the next federal election.

Michael Morrone said in an interview that he regretted making the request in an earlier letter, adding that its wording was clearly a mistake.

A week after the first letter was mailed, the national office of the NDP sent a follow-up letter to the 200 residents. It was signed by Robin Sears, chief agent for the party.

"The Criminal Code of Canada and the Canada Elections Act expressly forbid anyone, including any party or candidate, from offering to appoint an individual to a position in return for some future consideration," Sears's letter said.

Morrone's letter said the NDP was entitled to appoint federal enumerators in York Centre in the next federal election and said enumerators could expect to earn at least $100 for their work.

"As a member or supporter of our party you know that all monies for our campaigns are raised locally, mostly by individual contributions," said the letter. "We are, therefore, asking you to contribute a minimum of $25 of your earnings to the Vince Del Buono election fund."

Discounts, Not Kickbacks, Says Supermarket Report

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

Kickbacks in the food industry are isolated incidents if they occur at all, says a report prepared for the legislature's standing committee on agriculture.

A committee source has told the Times the report — to be tabled in the legislature, June 6 — says allegations of kickbacks have been exaggerated and inaccurately reported in the media.

The source said the claim that deals between distributors and supermarkets add as much as 15 per cent to food costs "is way off base."

"There is nothing in the $2 billion a year industry that could affect prices to that extent," he said.

Other so-called kickbacks were simply joint campaigns by supermarkets and distributors to move an overstocked product as quickly as possible.

Like a heavy advertiser in a newspaper who gets a special rate because he spends more, large food distributors get breaks in getting their products on supermarket shelves, he said, and this is a long way from being kickbacks.

He also said a committee researcher quoted in newspapers as saying he had cancelled cheques was misquoted and no clear evidence of kickbacks exist.

The report is more concerned with what is in the supermarket stocking system, why it doesn't work well and how improvements can be made.

One of the main problems is getting B.C. produce accepted by the supermarkets.

The short period that B.C. produce comes on stream is almost a nuisance for the stores.

Two other reports will be tabled Tuesday — one calling for an end to the Capital Gains Tax on farms while the other looks at the effect the department of Regional Economic Expansion (DREE) has had on B.C. agriculture.

Indications are that the report is critical of the federal DREE program as it relates to agriculture and finds that DREE funding has helped the fishing, lumber, and shipbuilding industries in B.C. at the expense of agriculture.

MAIR COURTS TAX REBATERS

Banks, credit unions and finance companies should enter the tax-rebate buying field in order to put an end to illegitimate rebate buyers, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Rafe Mair said Thursday.

Mair said in a news release there is a large market for such a service among students, the seasonally unemployed and people on a fixed income who need instant cash.

"For the past 40 years tax discounters have met this demand, but they have extracted huge profits, often at a rate of 1,000 per cent per annum," he said.

The minister said enforcement of recent provincial and federal legislation limiting the rate charged to 15 per cent of the expected refund will be difficult because discounters often close before action can be taken to stop them.

"Another unfortunate possibility would be the development of a covert black market rebate-buying industry," Mair said.

"One obvious solution to these problems is to encourage the traditional lending institutions to offer competition that would meet the social and economic demand while continuing to discourage those people who rely on the disadvantaged for excessive profits."

He said he has sent a letter to lending institutions saying his ministry will publicly support any legitimate industry capable of operating within the 15 per cent limit.

$3.5M Cyclotron Set for UBC

Education Minister Pat McGeer announced Thursday that a $3.5-million cyclotron will be built at the University of B.C., for the commercial production of radio isotopes.

McGeer said the facility will be built adjacent to the Tri-Universities Meson Facility (TRIUMF) at UBC with financing from the B.C. Development Corporation. Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., which will handle the sales of the isotopes, has guaranteed to repay the loan.

The minister said the cyclotron will be the first in the world to produce the radio isotopes on a commercial basis. There are two similar facilities—one in the United States and the other in Switzerland—but both are non-commercial, he said.

McGeer said construction is to begin shortly and production should begin within two years. He expects the operation to be profitable with profits being split between TRIUMF and AEC.

"This will put this province for the first time into advanced high-technology industry," he said.

Gabelman Quits Post

VANCOUVER (CP) — Colin Gabelmann has resigned his post as director of political education for the British Columbia Federation of Labor.

Gabelmann said Tuesday he decided to resign, effective June 30, when he became the New Democratic Party federal candidate in the North Vancouver-Burnaby riding.

Gabelmann got the federation job soon after the NDP provincial government was defeated in December, 1975, after a three-year term as MLA for North Vancouver-Seymour. He lost his seat when the government was defeated.

PHILLIPS
. . .given lesson

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips was once believed to be able to bluster his way through any situation no matter how tough the Opposition question.

But like Napoleon at Waterloo, Phillips learned a geography lesson Thursday.

It started during question period with Graham Lea (NDP—Prince Rupert) going after Phillips for not doing enough for the citizens of Stewart in northwestern B.C. who face an economic crisis with the imminent closure of the Granduc copper mine.

Lea asked Phillips why he hadn't gone up to Stewart, or at least talked with the mayor and town officials over alternate possible economic developments for the area. He challenged him to show some initiative.

Phillips thought he saw an opening and rushed it. Talk about initiative. Why wasn't the MLA for the area up in his office?

"If the member is really as concerned as he's making out to the legislature then he would certainly have been in my office; he would have been offering alternatives; would have taken some initiative instead of just yakking across the floor.

"Surely the minister isn't talking about the member from Atlin," the NDP called out across the floor to Phillips.

TAX THREAT

VANCOUVER (CP) — Municipal Affairs and Housing Minister Hugh Curtis Thursday threatened changes to the provincial income tax act if the federal government doesn't continue to support the development of rental accomodation.

Curtis, speaking at an Urban Development Institute seminar, said the Socred government wants retention of the capital cost allowance to help the continued development of rental accomodation.

TORY TRIES AGAIN

Tory leader Vic Stephens is still trying to get on the multi-party committee investigating Crown corporations.

Two weeks ago he all but demanded Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy have him appointed to the committee.

There is one vacancy on the 13-member committee, and Stephens maintains he should fill it.

McCarthy said the replacement is up to the selection committee, and told Stephens when he raised the matter Thursday in the legislature that the selections committee had not yet had a chance to meet.

The Crown corporations committee has been holding regular meetings with B.C. Hydro looking into overruns on recent dam projects and Stephens wants to be part of the investigation.

Rail Deal Urged

The B.C. government should enter into an agreement with its counterpart in Saskatchewan in order to revive the defunct Railwest railcar manufacturing plant, Gary Lauk (NDP—Vancouver Centre) said Thursday.

Lauk said in the legislature that Saskatchewan is looking into the possibility of establishing a railcar plant in Saskatoon to haul potash.

Lauk said that, at the very least, Phillips should contact the Saskatchewan government about the possibility of using discarded machinery from the Railwest plant in Squamish for the proposed Saskatoon plant.

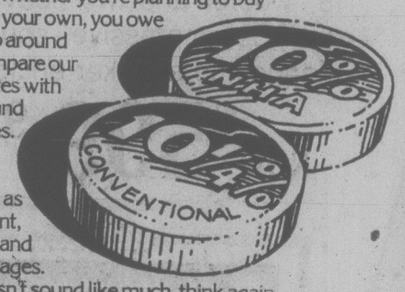
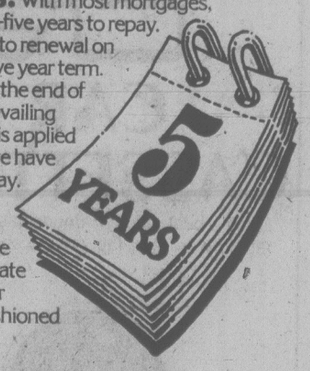
Don't sign any mortgage until you read this.

It's in your best interest to get our rates... Whether you're planning to buy a home or refinance your own, you owe it to yourself to shop around for a mortgage. Compare our five-year interest rates with credit unions, trust and insurance companies. We think you'll find we're at least a quarter percent, and as much as a half percent, lower on both NHA and Conventional mortgages. If you think that doesn't sound like much, think again. Because, on a $40,000 mortgage over five years, 1/4% will save you more than $400—and 1/2% will save you more than $800.

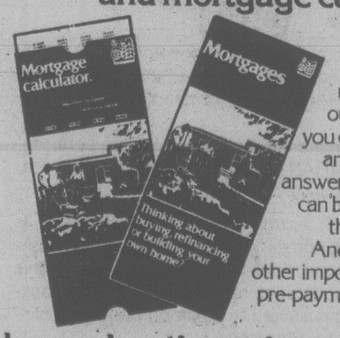


We offer the best group mortgage life insurance you can buy... No, mortgage insurance isn't mandatory with us, but it's a good idea. Since we're one of the largest mortgage lenders in Canada, our group rates are the lowest you can get. In fact, it costs only 13¢ per thousand dollars for people under thirty. Which amounts to as little as $5.20 a month on a $40,000 mortgage. And, should the unthinkable happen, your mortgage will be paid in full, and your family will be left with a home instead of a debt.

...and come to terms with inflation for five full years. With most mortgages, you're allowed up to twenty-five years to repay. But they are usually subject to renewal on the basis of a one, three or five year term. Which simply means that at the end of each and every term, the prevailing rate of interest, at that time, is applied to the renewal. We believe we have the lowest rate available today. And, because we only offer a five year term, we can guarantee our low rate for the longest time. Regardless of rate increases, or the economy, or what's fast becoming old-fashioned inflation.



...and we offer friendly advice, with a free information booklet and mortgage calculator. Before you make an offer to purchase—or even before you go looking for a house or a mortgage—you must work out a budget and know what you can afford. Our free booklet and calculator give you many answers. For instance, mortgages can be obtained for up to 95% of the value and up to $75,000. And we can also tell you about other important details like our liberal pre-payment privileges, for example.



And we can also help you when you're house-hunting, when you're moving and even when you're settling in.

☐ You can plan every step in advance...from leaving your present place, to finding your new house and moving in... using all the facts and advice in our new book, "Your Move!", a 119-page, $3.95 value. It's yours for the asking if you're a customer and you're moving. ☐ We have a special Mover's Loan of up to $2,500 for 3 months at a lower-than-usual interest rate to help with your interim moving costs. Termplan Personal Loans are also available for as much as $15,000 for up to 5 years at low bank interest rates—and they are fully life-insured at no extra cost. Best of all, your monthly payments are based on what you can afford. ☐ Our special Mover's Program for customers can also save you up to $9.50 on a Safe Deposit Box (subject to availability) or our Safekeeping service, and up to $10 on Canadian dollar traveller's cheques. ☐ As you can see, there's more to a Royal Bank mortgage than the lowest rate, the longest term, and the best group life insurance. So before you sign anything, drop in to one of our branches. When it comes to a mortgage, the Royal Bank is the best place to start. And the best place to finish.

Work Pt. Barracks For Industry Park?

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber Thursday urged Economic Development Minister Don Phillips to get involved in two aspects of helping industry establish in the Victoria area.

Barber said Phillips should get the B.C. Development Corporation working with local groups to get the Work Point Barracks from the federal government and use the 45 acres for an industrial park.

He also suggested BCDC work with the University of Victoria to create a joint private-public research centre on the campus.

The beauty of the two proposals, he told Phillips during debates on the minister's estimates, is that the land is available and wouldn't cost a cent because it is already publicly owned.

Private industry has invested $50 million at the University of Saskatchewan for joint research projects, and there is no reason the same couldn't happen here.

He said UVic president Dr. Howard Petch is enthusiastic about the idea. One idea already suggested is to have a national institute of toxicology located at UVic, Barber said.

With Saanich cancelling the Royal Oak industrial site, another alternative is desperately needed, Barber told Phillips.

Work Point Barracks is in the process of being declared surplus, and since it is public land in the sense it is owned by the federal government, local governments in co-operation with BCDC should press for the land.

It's a logical site with good marine access.

He called on Phillips to raise a fuss with Ottawa if the federal government didn't agree to turning it over.

Phillips said his ministry is working on the Vancouver Discovery Park concept for the Greater Victoria area.

Discovery park is not on one fixed location and it could easily establish at UVic as well, he said.

The concept knits together different types of research and includes training programs in conjunction with the ministry of education.

The Greater Victoria area already has the forestry research institute, the oceanographic institute and the agriculture research station, but they don't seem to know the other exists, the minister said.

Phillips said his ministry is working on getting them all together as part of a high technology industry on the Island.

Phillips' estimated expenditures of $29.1 million for the 1978-79 fiscal year passed relatively easily through the house in one afternoon's debates.

OFF-RESERVE AID PROJECT

A pilot project to extend consumer services to B.C. native Indians living off reserves was unveiled Thursday by Consumer Affairs Minister Rafe Mair.

Mair said in a news release the program involves a one-year, $17,500 contract with the Pacific Association of Communications in Friendship Indian Centres.

Luke Atleo, a native consultant chosen by PACIFIC, will undergo intensive training in provincial and federal consumer offices before undertaking field work at the friendship centres.

CANADIAN SPECIALS ON CBC LIST

TORONTO (CP) — More than 20 Canadian-made specials are on CBC television's fall schedule, the network announced Wednesday.

The network said in a news release the specials include Drying Up The Streets, a play set in the criminal subculture of a big city; the Massey family's story of its rise to fortune and fame; Tyler, a play about a young man's dream of owning the farm where he was raised, and the Toronto Symphony Orchestra's recent tour of Red China.

Christopher Plummer will narrate The Peking Man Mystery, Harry Rasky's scientific whodunit about the search for an elusive ancestor of modern man.

Among sports specials are the 13-day Canada Winter Games in Brandon, Man., in February, and September's Ali-Spinks return match for the world heavyweight boxing title.

The schedule adds an extra weekly half-hour of Canadian programming in prime time and a half-hour cut of evening material from the United States which was promised two seasons ago by CBC President Al Johnson.

Two drama series set in Canada's past, A Gift To Last and The Great Detective will be shown Wednesday evenings.

A five-part mini-series, The Canadians, will portray the lives of non-fictional Canadians from the past. The Albertans, a three-part mini-series, will dramatize life in that province.

At least six major opera telecasts on a Sunday afternoon series will come from Canada and other countries.

Yehudi Menuhin stars in The Music Man, a six-part CBC series that traces music from cave-man times to today.

New series from the U.S. include the Mary Tyler Moore variety hour; WKRP Cincinnati, a comedy about a struggling radio station; The Muppets, moving to network from local status; The Paper Chase, based on a movie of the same name, and a drama about corporate infighting in a television network.

Returning Canadian series include Front Page Challenge, Beachcombers, Rene Simard, Sidestreet, King of Kensington, Tommy Hunter Show, Marketplace, Man Alive, Ombudsman, Canadian Express, Saturday hockey, the Monday-night Superspecials, The Watson Report, The Nature of Things, Musicamera, Newsmagazine, Fortunes, For The Record, and Science Magazine.

U.S. shows returning this fall include Rhoda, Barney Miller, Happy Days, Three's Company, All In The Family, M.A.S.H. and the Disney hour.

2 CANADIAN NEWS MEDIA WIN IN U.S.

WASHINGTON (CP) — Two Canadian news media won prizes in the International Association of Fire Fighters 1978 awards contest.

The Daily Townsman of Cranbrook won the $500 first prize for the best photograph in a newspaper of less than 100,000 circulation with a photograph by Dick Floyd.

Radio station CKPC of Brantford, Ont., won a $200 second prize in the radio commentary category for an editorial by Garfield Chesson on the difficult role of firemen in the community.

Entires were submitted by locals of the association.

Thanks for the Memories, The Stars Tell Bob Hope

WASHINGTON — The sparkling, star-studded entertainment on stage and via satellite was all for Bob Hope, but "Old Ski Nose" couldn't resist becoming part of the act.

Hope, celebrating his 75th birthday, laughed throughout the 3 ½-hour presentation sponsored by the USO before 2,300 guests at the Kennedy Centre Opera House and rubbed elbows in the presidential box with his old golfing buddy, Gerald Ford, and Rosalynn Carter.

But near the end of the show, John Wayne, via satellite from California, beckoned the master comedian onstage to trade quips. Hope jumped at the chance.

"Duke, I hope I look as well as you do when I'm your age," Hope said.

"You did," Wayne replied.

Elizabeth Taylor, dressed in a smashing midnight blue pantsuit, delivered birthday greetings from Prince Charles, the Duke of Edinborough and Pope Paul, who wished Hope "abundant divine blessings."

British Ambassador Peter Jay offered "warm congratulations and best wishes for a very happy celebration" from Queen Elizabeth, who said Hope represented the "triumph of laughter over darkness."

Hope, who was born in England, did a 20-minute stint that included cracks about presidents he had known from Franklin D. Roosevelt to Jimmy Carter.

He talked about how beautiful Washington was "with the peanut trees in bloom;" how "If LBJ liked you he didn't applaud, he pulled your ears," and how FDR once told him, "The only thing we have to fear is your act."

The show opened with Pearl Bailey singing, Hello, Bobby, to the tune of Hello, Dolly, and included performers ranging fom George C. Scott in person to a taped routine by George Burns; from Lucille Ball to Charo, and from Dorothy Lamour to Alan King.

Hope's wife, Delores, sang, On a Clear Day You Can See Forever, and Bing Crosby's wife, Kathryn Grant, spoke of the two men in introducing a medley of scenes from their "Road" films.

Hope concluded the show by singing his theme song, Thanks for the Memories, first alone and then with the assembled cast.

CB Love Affairs

LANCASTER, Pa. — A man who said his wife used a CB radio to attract lovers has been convicted of voluntary manslaughter for killing her with a shotgun while she slept.

A Lancaster County court jury of six men and six women deliberated 55 minutes Thursday before returning the verdict against James Shimp, 41.

Shimp testified that he acted out of frustration and anger after he found his wife at a diner and she refused to leave with him.

While on his way home he heard her calling on her CB radio for "Flying Angel," a name included on a list of lovers that she had made contact with on her radio, Shimp testified.

He said he recognized his wife's voice and her CB nickname, "Brown Eyes." He shot her about 1 a.m. the next morning after she had returned home and fallen asleep in her bed.

Gamble Exports: Oilmen

CALGARY (CP) — Canada's oil industry is asking the federal government to gamble that exporting more oil to the United States now will increase future oil reserves.

Top company officials told the National Energy Board Thursday they favor more exports, based on new industry forecasts.

Currently, the companies estimate a 400,000 barrel-a-day surplus in production capacity and feel some of the oil should be exported to provide them with exploration and development funds.

The additional exploration, they argue, will bring on stream more oil supplies than might otherwise be available.

Kenneth Burgis, senior vice-president of Hudson Bay Oil and Gas Ltd., said the optimistic oil supply outlined by the industry is based on more production from the Alberta oil sands and heavy oil deposits.

That production will require billions of dollars in plant construction, he said. The exports could help provide the high cash flow needed for financing.

William Richards, president of Dome Petroleum Ltd., said he disagreed with those who felt oil should be held in the ground to meet future needs. Changes in technology could mean "it will be worth no more than whale oil is today."

Exporting now will provide the companies with the money to develop even larger reserves, Richards added.

But he and Burgis told the board the only sure thing about any long-range forecast of oil supply and demand is that it will be wrong.

Burgis said rapid development of the oil sands and heavy oil deposits depends on whether the plants are financially attractive to the industry.

If the plants are delayed, making the forecasts wrong, he said the government should consider a West Coast oil port as a backstop, allowing an increase in imports if needed to meet domestic demand.

Earlier Thursday, officials of the Alberta energy conservation board estimated recoverable oil reserves from the Pembina area of west-central Alberta at 500-million barrels.

Alaska Highway Paving Delayed

OTTAWA (CP) — It is unlikely that paving of the Alaska highway will be completed before construction of the proposed Alaska natural gas pipeline begins in 1981, a senior public works official said Thursday.

A. D. Wilson, assistant deputy minister for operations, told a Commons committee there is also some difference of opinion whether it would be of benefit to complete paving before or after the massive pipeline project is complete.

There is no precise co-ordination between work on the highway and on the pipeline, he said.

At present, of the 1,500 miles of the highway within Canada, only about 300 miles are paved. But both the Canadian and U.S. governments have been setting aside funds to pave the road a section at a time.

In 1978-79, the government expects to spend about $10 million on paving and $2.6 million on reconstruction of bridges. The U.S. is paying for paving of some of the sections in Canada with the public works department doing the work.

Mothers Warned On PCBs

OTTAWA (CP) — Women who have been exposed to polychlorinated biphenyls should consult their physicians before breast feeding, says a federal report on contaminated breast milk.

The report was prepared by a committee representing the Canadian Pediatric Society, the Pharmacological Society of Canada and experts in toxicology.

A national survey by the committee showed that PCB levels in mother's milk ranged from one to 68 micrograms per kilogram. Doctors have been advised consider carefully advising breast feeding when the mother's milk contains more than 50 micrograms per kilogram.

"In most instances, given the known benefits of breast feeding, it would be advisable to continue nursing," the report said.

PDB's, used widely in Canada for more than 40 years, now are permitted only for certain electrical equipment in carefully controlled conditions.

The chemical has been found to accumulate n the environment, through the food chain and therefore can be passed on to human milk.

Servants To Vote On Union

OTTAWA (CP) — The Public Service Staff Relations Board has ordered a vote by 1,600 federal public servants to determine whether they want to be represented by the new Canadian Union of Professional and Technical Employees.

The new union has applied to be certified as bargaining agent for 1,200 federal government translators and 400 members of the aircraft operations group.

The employees were previously represented by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada.

At a hearing May 4, the board found that the Canadian Union of Professional and Technical Employees is a legally-constituted "employee organization" and that it had submitted valid proof of membership from more than 70 per cent of the employees in each of the groups.

The new union had argued that a representation vote was unnecessary.

Off-Hand Answers to Ryan Plan Given by Chretien

OTTAWA (CP)-Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan's first attempt to mediate in the sales tax dispute between the federal government and the Parti Quebecois government was dismissed off-handedly Thursday by Finance Minister Jean Chretien.

Ryan intervened in the debate Wednesday by holding a news conference in which he offered Chretien two possible compromises to end the six-week dispute with the Quebec government.

Chretien ignored one of his suggestions and told opposition critics in the Commons the other would be too slow.

Ryan suggested Chretien devise a special agreement under which he could turn over to the Quebec government the $226 million set aside for the province in his budget.

Failing that he suggested Chretien alter income tax rebate plan by lowering the Quebecers' 1978 taxes by $226 million and letting the province simiitaneously raise its taxes to recover the money. The province then would spend the money as it chose.

But Chretien said he does not intend to budge from his plan to offer each Quebec taxpayer a rebate of up to $85 on his 1977 income tax payment.

Chretien ignored the first of Ryan's suggestions and said the second would mean Quebecers would not get their money until next spring. This was too long to wait. By that time, the effect of the retail sales tax cuts provided in his budget for the eight other provinces would have expired.

Quebec Tory Roche La Salle told Chretien his position as finance minister obligated him to take the next step in setting up a round of negotiations with the Quebec government, but Chretien told him he has been waiting 10 days for Quebec finance minister Jacques Parizeau to return his latest phone call.

He also told LaSalle that he had read in a Quebec morning newspaper that 87 per cent of the Quebec population supports his plan to send rebates to each taxpayer in the province.

Later, when Chretien had left the House, LaSalle told MPs it was naive of the minister to take the poll seriously.

However, LaSalle said, he is unhappy more Quebecers are not speaking out against the federal position which the opposition says helps the rich more than the poor in Quebec.

BOMB FOUND AT CANNES

CANNES, France (AP) — Firemen acting on an anonymous telephone tip discovered a one-pound charge of plastic explosives hidden in the main hall of the Cannes Film Festival on Tuesday, officials said.

Legal Quebec Holiday

QUEBEC (CP) — A bill to designate June 24 Quebec's national holiday was introduced Thursday in the national assembly.

June 24 has traditionally been celebrated in Quebec as the feast of St. Jean Baptiste, patron saint of French Canada. Last year the Parti Quebecois government decreed that June 24 was the "national holiday" by order in council, but the new law will make the change permanent.

This year Quebecers will have June 23 a day off from work, because June 24 falls on a Saturday. Next year June 25 will be the day off, with the actual holiday on a Sunday.

Ottawa Youth Program Botched

EDMONTON (CP) — Political opportunism is undermining the good work of Katimavik, the federal government's year-old adventure program for youth, says one of its co-ordinators.

Over the past year, the program has been riddled with staff resignations. A new national director was named only two weeks ago and all the Prairie co-ordinators are being fired.

New national director is Paul Phaneuf of Vaudreuil, Que., minister of youth and recreation in the former Liberal government of Robert Bourassa.

Patrick Melanson, co-ordinator for the Yamnuska project 70 kilometres west of Calgary, is one of the seven Prairie-Northwest Territories region co-ordinators being fired.

"We're losing a lot of really good people who gave a lot of time and energy to the fulfillment of this program," Melanson said.

He said information from the co-ordinators was often completely garbled in Saskatoon, where the program director was located, before being sent to the national office in Montreal.

At times, project funds were held up so long that large bank overdrafts had to be run up, he said.

Jacques Burelle, of Montreal, deputy executive director of Katimavik, denies the firing of the co-ordinators was related to past disputes.

The contracts were not renewed because it was decided that in 1978-79, all co-ordinators would have to be native to the region in which they are working, he said. None of the Prairie staff were.

Burelle said the imports did not understand the region at all, suffering a kind of culture shock which reduced their effectiveness.

A Double Attack On Keable

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal lawyers launched a two-pronged attack in the Supreme Court of Canada Thursday against the Keable commission's constitutional authority to investigate the RCMP security service.

On one front, they argued that the Quebec inquiry focussed its search for evidence so broadly that it infringed exclusive federal jurisdiction over the Mounties, national security and procedure in prosecutions under the criminal code.

But the federal government also developed a more specific line of attack, contending that Commissioner Jean Keable had no right to issue subpoenas to former solicitor-general Francis Fox.

Lawyer Joseph Nuss, representing Attorney-General Ron Basford, explained to the high court that the subpoenas "ordered" Fox to produce RCMP papers or leave himself pen to "punishment under the law."

Under the Quebec Public Inquiry Commissions Act, Keable had a judge's power to issue the subpoenas and, if they were not obeyed, to issue bench warrants for the arrest of a witness and to cite witnesses for contempt.

But Nuss argued that this provincial law was not binding on "the federal Crown," which means "federal cabinet ministers in their official capacity." The subpoenas were issued to Fox as solicitor-general and minister rrsponsible for the RCMP.

The lawyer based his argument on centuries-old English jurisprudence that in general "the Crown makes law for the subjects . . . not for herself." A law was only binding on the Crown if there is a specific provision to this effect and there was none in the Quebec act.

If the argument is accepted in the high court ruling, it would appear to mean that all provincial commissions of inquiry cannot force federal ministers to produce government documents. They could, for example, file letters of request for papers.

Lawyer Nuss also based his argument on the constitutional dictum that provincial legislation is not binding on the "federal Crown." This meant Keable's subpoenas were not binding because he only had authority to issue them under the Quebec act.

"Any attempt to affect the federal Crown could only come from Parliament, Nuss said.

The argument drew an apparent reaction xf surprise from Mr. Justice Ronald Martland who suggested it led to the conclusion that provincial inquiries couldn't even force appearances by RCMP constables.

"How far does it go?" he asked.

Nuss replied that most policemen could not claim to be representatives of the Crown "but that doesn't apply to the minister because he is right next to the Crown." The RCMP Commissioner might also be close enough to benefit, he added.

Earlier, another federal lawyer argued that Keable's numerous subpoenas for all varieties of RCMP papers were evidence that he was using the inquiry into police crime as a pretext to explore Canada's system of national security.

In the process the Keable commission broke the Official Secrets Act by tabling confidential RCMP papers against the express instructions of Fox, Michel Robert said.

Outlook Bright: Paper

NEW YORK (CP) — The Wall Street Journal says Canadian businessmen see their country's economy improving, with a better relationship developing between government and business.

In a special report on Canada, the financial newspaper also says Ottawa's efforts to bolster the faltering Canadian dollar through $7 billion in bank credit lines and foreign bond issues is working.

The article says bitterness between government and business over high taxes and government interference is fading, to be replaced by mild optimism in the business community. It says wage and price controls are coming off at a time when both the federal and provincial governments are working to check their spending.

On the Canadian dollar, the reports says the government's financing plan indicates to the foreign exchange market that it is prepared to defend the dollar vigorously. In addition, it said, foreign borrowings by some provinces also have helped to prop up the currency.

The newspaper reported that Ontario's latest public bond offering of U.S. $200 million sold well. The 30-year, 9⅜ per cent bonds are due June 1, 2008.

Saigon No More

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saigon is gone and Ho Chi Minh City is being accepted officially by the United States Board on Geographic Names. A board official said Tuesday that the names board, which standardizes federal usuage, is going along with the name given Saigon by Vietnam after what had been South Vietnam fell in April 1975.

Tories Protest Curbs

OTTAWA (CP) — The Progressive Conservative party remains at loggerheads with federal election officials over campaign spending restrictions for Oct. 16 byelections called to fill eight vacant Commons seats.

In a letter released Thursday, Conservative campaign chairman Lowell Murray says there is no basis for a claim by Jean-Marc Hamel, the chief electoral officer, that current spending by candidates in byelection areas must count against byelection spending ceilings.

Any spending now is being used to promote candidates for the next general election, Murray argues in his letter to Hamel.

Murray says his party takes the position that it has nominated no candidates to contest the eight Oct. 16 byelections.

Sloppy Grants Raked by MPs

OTTAWA (CP) — Top officials of the Canada Council clashed with members of a Commons committee Thursday over allegations by the auditor-general of sloppy administration of millions in government funds by the council.

Lincoln Alexander (PC—Hamilton West) drew an angry rebuttal from the council's associate director, Tim Porteous, when he said the council is "a mess" and should move quickly to "clean up its act."

Porteous said Alexander was misinterpreting comments in the report.

Raymond Dubois, assistant auditor-general, read the committee a list of examples of sloppy administration after one senior council official, Claude Gauthier, said some of the criticisms are "too broad."

Federal auditors also found that applications for grants had not been signed, there were incorrect totals on some grant forms, a grant notice had been made out six months after the cheque was issued, grant payments had been delayed, payments were made in advance of requests, a notice of an award had not been signed, there were unauthorized signatures on grant awards and there was insufficient accounting of how an award had been used.

The Canada Council received about $60 million from the federal government last year to help support artists and to promote the arts in Canada.

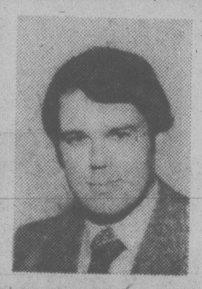
New Car & Truck SPECIALS

Brian McLean talks about new cars.



"I might be biased but in my opinion the product we have for sale this year is by far the best in the marketplace. GM is several years ahead of its time with weight reductions and shortened wheel bases. These energy-economical cars still keep their roomy interiors and all the comfort features. But they get a lot more miles to a gallon. The most exciting cars of 1978? The Buick Century and Regal, the Pontiac Le Mans and Grand Prix. These cars are completely redesigned and they are just beautiful. Our customers think so too—we've never sold more of these car lines. This year the quality, the styling and the prices of our cars has never been better. I say it and so do the consumer reports and magazines. There's never been a better time to get behind the wheel of a new Empress Pontiac, Buick, or GMC."

Knowles Urges Horner Apology

OTTAWA (CP) — As Conservatives applauded a veteran New Democratic MP requested Thursday that Industry Minister Jack Horner withdraw remarks he made about alleged opposition speculation on the dollar.

Stanley Knowles, NDP House leader, said while unsuccessfully arguing a question of privilege that Horner should apologize for the good of the image of the Commons.

He was referring to remarks Horner made in the Commons last November and virtually repeated Wednesday outside the House that members of the opposition benefitted from the fluctuating Canadian dollar.

Stevens beamed and thumped his desk in pleasure as Knowles told Speaker James Jerome "I believe I have a right to ask that just as one member Wednesday did apologize, so there should be an apology from the other side."

Just before that he said: "My reason for feeling that I have a question of privilege is that as a person who does not belong to either of the (Liberal and Conservative) parties which are engaged in this warfare I am concerned about the image of Parliament and I suggest that these allegations (of financial manipulations) back and forth between members of those two parties in the House are not good for the image of the chamber."

He said in terms of "gentlemanly behavoir" on the floor of the Commons there was little difference between the Stevens and Horner remarks.

He mentioned this as he unsuccessfully sought committee discussion of the urgent need for introduction of conflict-of-interest legislation designed to prevent MPs from making use of their position to their financial betterment.

Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen told Opposition Leader Joe Clark and others that such legislation will be introduced by the end of this month or early in June.

Conservatives and New Democrats argued that Liberals and Conservatives would not have been able to exchange recent accusations of currency speculation if such conflict-of-interest guides existed today.

UVic's Rhodos A Labor of Love

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

A gardener would need patience and plenty of time and money to attempt cultivating the rarer types of rhododendrons found in the University of Victoria gardens.

Some of them don't even blossom until they're 30 years old and most have been raised from seeds carefully collected from such exotic places as Burma and Tibet.

"It's a labor of love," says UVic grounds superintendent Rex Murfitt.

Murfitt now watches over nearly 200 species of rhododendrons in a priceless collection of more than 350 plants, many bequeathed or donated to the university by ardent horticulturalists.

The University Gardens, located on both sides of the Henderson Road entrance to UVic, has the finest rhododendron collection of Vancouver Island, Murfitt says without hesitation.

But while ready to praise the magnificent local specimens, he's quick to acknowlege the true pioneers in the art of rhododentron cultivation.

Europeans, particularly the British have a passion for collecting the magnificent shrubs, and have been doing it many years longer than their North American counterparts.

"They'd go out for a year or two and come staggering back with all these seeds from rhododendrons."

Gradually, the art of rhododendron cultivation spread to North America and has taken hold particularly on the West Coast where the rainy,humid conditions are ideal.

Mrs. Simpson, who died in 1973, started her collection in the 1920's from seeds obtained on journeys to China.

Murfitt believes that two species in her collection are so rare they are no longer cultivated and he plans to have them officially identified by a botanist.

These and another valuable collection donated by Dr. Edmund Lohbrunner, of Victoria, form the basis of University Gardens.

The rarest two species in the collection are tree-like rhododendrons about 15 feet tall.

One is rhododendron decorum, collected as a seed in the Szecluen Province of China. Another is rhododendron leclerei, with a bluish flower, that was found 10,000 feet above sea level in the Yunnan Province of China.

This one is at least 40 years old and doing well in its new surroundings.

Murfitt is now going to take on the large task of labelling all plants in the two-acre garden for the benefit of visitors.

To him the most important thing is not the rarity of the collection, but its beauty, and the enjoyment it gives to people who will never have anything like it in their own back yards.

TOWN TALK

Among the graduates at UVic's Convocation Ceremonies Saturday will be Eric Scoates, who'll pick up a Bachelor of Arts in history.

What makes Scoates interesting is the fact he's a grandfather who'll be 71 June 18.

About 12 members of his family, including his wife Marion, will all be there but his grandchildren, who live in Vancouver, can't make it.

Scoates says he decided to go to university after he retired in 1972 from the Victoria School Board and found there just wasn't enough to do.

Although senior citizens are entitled to free tuition, Scoates paid his own way.

He says his biggest and most pleasant surprise was the reception he got from his fellow students.

"I fit in so well with the 20-year-olds," he says "They were very kind to me. We used to swap notes and borrow books from one another. I must say I never felt any generation gap."

Water mistake may be a bad pun but it's an admission by Town Talk of a boo-boo involving one of Canada's best-known water color artists so perhaps we can be forgiven.

That's a roundabout way to apologize for our incorrect identification of local artist Brian Travers-Smith as Bill in an article last week.

Travers-Smith, of 590 Transit, was one of four new members elected to the Canadian Society of Painters in Water Color during its annual meeting in Toronto this month.

A final note from the NDP convention last weekend at UVic: The militantly feminist Women's Caucus was smaller and had less influence than in previous years. But it still tried its best to plan strategy and get candidates it supported elected to key positions in the party.

That was why a number of women delegates who are not caucus members found a washroom unbelievably crowded at one point between ballots. When one finally wondered out loud why the line-up was so long, she was told: "Oh, this isn't a line-up. This is a caucus meeting."

An information officer's job is to provide information, right?

Seems Transport Canada has a new guy on the job.

Wrote us a chatty little note saying he has taken over as regional manager of public affairs for the department.

A lovely little note, it was, full of data about past experience, plans to help the media every which way and urging us not to hesitate and call if we need any right answers.

Whoever you are, Mr. Mystery, it was nice to hear from you.

Everything is now hunky-dory at the provincial museum.

The day after a story appeared in the Times outlining tourist beefs over the museum's early closing hours during peak visitor periods in the summer, Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy announced that as of June 1 and lasting through to Sept.30, the museum will stay open until 9 p.m.

Museum officials said they had had scads of beefs from angry tourists who turned up to visit the place only to find out that contrary to tourist brochures listing closing time as 8.30 p.m., the museum had shut up shop at 5.30 p.m.

Thetis Swimmers Losers As City Saves: Lifeguards

Former lifeguards at the city-owned Thetis Lake are being discriminated against because of a labor dispute, the president of Local 50 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees said today.

Jim Walker said the lifeguards, some of whom were on the B.C. team that won the national championships recently in Edmonton, are being forced to look elsewhere for work because of the hard line being taken by the city's parks department.

In 1977, on behalf of the lifeguards, the union lodged a grievance, saying the lifeguards should be paid as outside workers and about three weeks ago the Labor Relations Board made a ruling in favor of the grievance.

The board ruled, however, that the rate for lifeguards should be arbitrable and the city is still negotiating the rate that will be paid.

David Philip, 22, of 4528 Tiedemann Place, is one of the lifeguards affected. He spent one year, unpaid, as an apprentice at the lake and four as lifeguard. He, like the other former lifeguards, has his National Lifeguard Society certificate. In spite of numerous applications he cannot get a job at the lake this year.

Parks administrator Cliff Bate confirms that this year the city will advertise for lifeguards.

In the past years the Thetis Lake lifeguards have been employed not only as lifeguards, but as maintenance workers and fireguards in the Thetis Lake park.

Bate said this year they will be employed solely as lifeguards, which means when the weather is unfavorable, they will not be on the payroll.

Walker said this means that well-trained lifeguards will look elsewhere for work which has better continuity and agreed with Philip that this means people using Thetis Lake will not be as well protected.

He said the parks department's hard line was undoubtedly due to the fact the lifeguards had taken action to get paid the same amount as other outside workers.

"They (the city) hire paper pickers for Beacon Hill Park at the base rate of $6.94. It's ridiculous that people saving lives get less," he said, adding he had seen a girl cutting grass at Thetis Lake last summer who was also getting more than the lifeguards.

Later today the city posted an advertisement for a head lifeguard, offering a $5.90 rate. In addition to supervisory and lifeguard duties, the job also requires some custodial duties.

Walker said at a meeting about a week ago city manager Jim Bramley told union officials the city had no intention of employing the highest-paid lifeguards in the province.

Philip said protection at the lake is already suffering from the dispute. In past years a lifeguard or attendant was at Thetis Lake for the Victoria Days holiday weekend. This year, he said, there was no lifeguard and the emergency phone, normally there, had not been installed.

"We're concerned the park is going to be destroyed and people are not going to be as safe as they have been," Philip said. "In 1977 we had some 176 reportable first aid cases, 28 water rescues involving 32 people."

He said he had been told he and his fellow-workers were not being hired because of poor relations with other staff members but Walker said this was not the case, that if there were poor relations they were with management.

Walker said the union is asking that lifeguards receive the basic rate of $6.94 and that the head lifeguard receive the second rate of $7.20.

He said the city's latest offer will be considered at an executive meeting this evening.

DID KILLER SLAY TWO — OR THREE?

A Port Angeles police spokesman said today there is little doubt in his mind the murders of a woman in Victoria and a woman in the U.S. city were committed by the same individual.

Lieutenant Roy Morgan said a man similar to one described in the Victoria killing was seen in the Port Angeles area a few days before the body of 20-year-old Janet Bowcut was found strangled in her apartment bedroom April 24.

A composite drawing of a man wanted for questioning in connection with the Mother's Day murder in Victoria of 26-year-old Janice Aili Forbes is being circulated in the Port Angeles area.

Morgan said the two killings have several points in common.

Both victims were young mothers who lived alone with their small children in apartments. Both were killed sometime during the afternoon.

Both were found in the bedroom of their apartments, face down, their hands tied behind their backs and with a cord wound around their necks. The cords in each case had been gathered from the victim's own belongings, in Mrs. Forbes's case, from her bathrobe.

In neither case was the victim sexually assaulted, nor were there any signs of struggle. The killer had also arranged linen in an identical, bizarre manner but police are withholding details.

Mrs. Forbes's two children, aged 5 and 9, were outside playing at the time she was murdered.

Miss Bowcut had a six-month-child who was found in the middle of her bed crying when police finally broke into the room around 6 p.m. The killer had placed pillows around the bed to make sure the baby didn't fall.

Police are also looking into the possibility the murders may be linked to the killing of a young woman in San Diego in March.

Morgan said the body of a woman was found in a ravine. She had been strangled and bound with wire in similar fashion to the other two.

On Wednesday Victoria police Insp. Angus Stewart released a composite drawing of a man seen in the area of Mrs. Forbes's apartment the afternoon of the murder. The man is described as black, about five feet four inches tall, with short curly black hair, and a pock-marked complexion. He was wearing a knee-length shiny black leather or vinyl coat and wore a cap.

Morgan said several persons reported seeing a man of similar description in Port Angeles five to six days before Miss Bowcut was killed.

MAGGIE SCUTTLED?

The Princess Marguerite will be kicked off the Seattle run by U.S. pollution regulations in the next year or two and the NDP says she should be upgraded rather than scrapped.

The vessel, owned by the government through the B.C. Steamships Corp., needs about $350,000 worth of work to bring her up to environment standards required by a new U.S. law which takes effect in January, 1980.

Travel Minister Grace McCarthy agrees the ship is aging and will have to be replaced but won't say what vessel will take over the four-hour run to Seattle.

The logical choice is the Queen of Surrey, currently sitting idle.

Charles Barber (NDP—Victoria) says tourists fall in love with the old-fashioned charm of the Marguerite and for this reason alone, she should be refitted and continued on the run.

People think it's a bit of Buckingham Palace, says the NDP MLA, while the Queen of Surrey on the other hand has no character.

The new U.S. law says all ships travelling in U.S. waters will have to install raw sewage holding tanks or sewage treatment systems by 1980.

McPherson Books in the Black

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

After one year under new management the McPherson Playhouse is doing very nicely, thank you.

For the first time in years the books are in the black, the theatre is being used as it never has been before and there are plans for an even more bustling future.

That was the theme of the first annual report presented Thursday by the McPherson Playhouse Foundation, the private group which took over the operation of the city-owned theatre April 1, 1977.

At a media reception foundation president Allan Purdy did some modest and justifiable trumpet-blowing as he gave a rundown of facts and figures on the year ending March 31.

When city council was first approached in 1976 and asked to turn over management of the theatre through a lease arrangement, it was told that the McPherson's deficit could be wiped out in the first year.

As it turned out, that was a conservative estimate.

Purdy reported Thursday that the foundation had been able to transform the theatre's 1976 deficit of $22,000 (under direct city of Victoria operation) into a 1977 operating surplus of more than $28,000.

Even after deducting $2,600 for building alterations and improvements and $11,000 in providing subsidized theatre rental and free services to various community organizations, the group still finished its first year with more than $14,000 net revenue.

Purdy noted this financial turnaround came in a year when the cross-Canada trend saw attendances at live theatre and music performances slump by 15 to 25 per cent.

It was achieved through finding several new potential uses for the theatre which in turn produced a substantial increase in gross attendance. Total attendance at the McPherson jumped more than 13,000 to 168,000 and that did not include 40,000 who attended the arts and crafts exhibitions held during the year.

There was a 60 per cent increase in activities, from 374 in 1976 to 601 last year.

In considering the elimination of the deficit, the improvements undertaken and the underwriting of community services, Purdy said, "an objective appraisal would have to conclude that in real values matched against the 1976 operation, our contribution has equalled an upswing of net receipts of not less than $50,000 to $60,000 or more, an incredible accomplishment in a recessive year."

His report said the foundation has participated, and will continue to participate, in the actual production of live stage entertainment and film presentations on a "shared risk" basis with various organizations.

"There is a risk factor and I am of the opinion that we should be prepared to take the occasional risk, providing that the potential loss is not extraordinary," he added.

Purdy stressed the popularity of the McPherson's free noon-time concerts and theatre shows, and said the management committee is now arranging a summer series of concerts.

Other events planned include a major arts seminar, a musical talent search, a school choirs festival, school bands competition and ethnic concerts.

End of the Line for Bowman

BOSTON (CP) — Scotty Bowman may have coached his last game behind the bench of Montreal Canadiens.

Bowman, who was inaccessible for a good part of the post-game period Thursday night after the Canadiens had defeated Boston Bruins 4-1 to win their third consecutive Stanley Cup, said his future was out of his hands.

There has been speculation that Bowman would go to various other National Hockey League clubs, including Vancouver Canucks, St. Louis Blues, New York Rangers and Colorado Rockies.

"This may have been my last game behind the Montreal Canadiens bench," he said. "And my last game as a coach."

Bowman's remarks took away, momentarily, some of the spotlight from Canadiens' celebration of their 4-2 victory in the best-of-seven Stanley Cup final and Boston's strong showing in the series.

NHL president John Ziegler was among the first to laud the beaten Bruins. Poking his head into the Bruin dressing room, he informed Boston coach Don Cherry: "You did a hell of a job. It was great for the league."

"You know, that's the first time that's happened to me," said Cherry. "It was kind of nice of him to do that."

The Bruins battled the Canadiens every step of the way in the six-game set, although Montreal was able to play its controlled game after going ahead 2-1 at 9:20 of the first period on the first of two goals by Mario Tremblay.

Steve Shutt and Rejean Houle scored the other goals for the Canadiens with Brad Park replying for Boston.

"We got the first goal tonight and if we had gotten the second, we would have been all right," said Cherry.

"But to get scored on after killing a penalty like we did, that hurts.

"We sort of sagged after they got the second goal, but we picked things up again in the third."

The Canadiens limited Boston to just 16 shots at Ken Dryden, four of them coming in each of the first two periods. Montreal tested Gerry Cheevers 24 times.

Cherry noted that the Bruins were beaten by an excellent club, but promised that his team "we'll be a lot stronger next year."

There were a few other sidelights to the sixth game.

Ziegler ordered referee-in-chief Scotty Morrison to meet with Cherry and Bowman prior to the game.

Morrison, fed up with the complaining done by both men during the finals, said the meeting was brief and simple, and so was his message.

"I told them to respect the referees," he said.

The teams obviously got the message. Referee Andy van Hellemond called just five minor penalties Thursday.

It was Montreal's 21st Stanley Cup triumph and there was the usual champagne-cork popping going on in the Canadiens' dressing room.

Tremblay was the centre of attention in the Montreal quarters along with defenceman Larry Robinson, the winner of the Conn Smythe Trophy as the top over-all performer in the playoffs. Robinson was also selected by the Professional Hockey Writers Association as the best performer in the final series.

Cheevers, whose right leg bore an ugly bruise, perhaps summed it up the best by drawing an analogy with last weekend's Preakness horse race, won by Affirmed.

"Now I know how Alydar felt," he said. "We could catch up to the Canadiens, but we could never pass them."

Hibs: Year Away From Scots Best?

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

The Hibernians of Edinburgh, says their coach, John Fraser, "are one season away from being the best soccer club in Scotland."

He'll get no argument from Brian Hughes, who coaches Vistas, the Vancouver Island representative side.

"I believe him," said Hughes after the Hibs recorded Thursday's almost-embarassing 9-0 victory over the Vistas at Royal Athletic Park.

"They showed us that a gulf still exists between top-class soccer and the Canadian game. The Hibs aren't far off from being top class."

It was one of the most one-sided results ever recorded here by a visiting team from the British Isles. And the reason may be one of Vistas' doing.

The Islanders challenged the Hibs, fourth-place finishers in the Scottish Premier Division, to a wide-open game before 1,642 fans. Vistas went flirting with Hibs' strength, and it proved disastrous.

Exceedingly quick, Hibs break out of their own zone with amazing speed. Like, if you blink, you're apt to miss the entire play. There is intelligence in their attack and good utilization of excellent wingers.

But mostly, it is "the charge."

Helping make it possible is Mike McDonald, a goalkeeper who booms the ball consistently in the 60-to-70-yard range, and backs that race — never stroll — to the attack.

If you need further evidence of the quickness with which Hibs move from defence to attack, consider this: Two of their four first-half goals came off Vista corner kicks.

"I couldn't believe it," said Hughes. "Our corners . . . in their zone, and they wind up with the goals."

McDonald, grabbing a cross from the corner, boomed away a great kick that winger Ally MacLeod caught up to just outside the Vistas' penalty area. Catching the Island defenders unawares, MacLeod had no trouble opening scoring in the third minute of play, and the rout was on.

MacLeod, sparkling throughout, went on to figure in five more goals, scoring three more and setting up two. Arthur Duncan and big Tony Higgins, Hibs' other winger, both scored twice while Des Bremner accounted for the game's other goal.

Although it was an exhibition, the Hibs never let up. Neither Ted Van Waes nor Grant Darley, who shared Vistas' stopping duties, had much of a chance to keep the score respectable.

Hibs' overpowering offense made it easy for McDonald and the defense. Vistas' best scoring opportunities came in the first half. Rob Williams, combining neatly with Steve Forslund, had an excellent chance at the 12-minute mark but shot wide. Forslund, from about 25 yards out, unleashed a good shot that McDonald turned away.

Mark Robb, set up by Steve Carroll, came up with Vistas' best scoring chance just before the half. Robb clearly beat McDonald but his sharply-angled shot rolled wide of the goal.

It was Hibernians' second victory in four starts of a seven-game Canadian tour. The Scots tied the Canadian Select 1-1 in Hamilton, beat Calgary 4-1 and played to a 2-2 draw with Vancouver Whitecaps last Tuesday. Hibs wind up their tour with games in Edmonton, Winnipeg and Ottawa.

Mt.Doug Is High Again

Mt. Douglas gained a measure of revenge for a loss in the recent Greater Victoria meet while capturing the Vancouver Island high school track and field championship Thursday at Centennial Stadium.

Sparked by a strong performance from its male athletes, Mt. Doug chalked up 235 points while runner-up Claremont, the city meet winner, accumulated 174.

Dunsmuir came third with 108 and was followed by the three top up-Island teams — Cowichan (65), Shawnigan Lake (62) and G.P. Vanier of Courtenay (61).

Mt. Douglas also sends 18 qualifiers to the B.C. meet at Burnaby's Swangard Stadium, June 2-3, while Claremont will be represented by 10. The top two finishers in each event at the Island meet received berths in the provincials. Dunsmuir placed six and Esquimalt and Vanier landed five spots each.

Mt. Douglas dominated Claremont in the boys' events 137-95 but just managed to edge out the surprising Dunsmuir girls' contingent, 97-93. Claremont girls had 79 points.

Individually, Craig Taylor of Vanier provided some high points and shared outstanding male athlete honors with Nick Bennett of Victoria High while Judy Tobacco of Mt. Douglas collected the corresponding female award.

Taylor won the 100 metre dash and set a new meet record with a leap of 7.14 metres in the long jump while Bennett set a new mark of 2.03 m. in the high jump and placed second to Taylor in the long jump.

PEGGY NELSON

Jack Jorgensen of Edward Milne won the "most valuable to team" citation by scoring all the Sooke school's 18 points with a first in the 200 m. and a second in the 100.

Tobacco established a new standard of 25.1 seconds in the 200 m. and added other victories in the 400 and high jump.

Delesalle, Walstrom Head B.C. Gym Team

Philip Delesalle and Owen Walstrom of Victoria will head a team from British Columbia taking part in the Canadian gymnastic and trampoline championships this weekend in Ottawa.

Delesalle, the reigning Canadian champion, and Walstom are both fresh from strong performances in the Pacific Rim Inviational meet.

Former Rocks Join Hustlers

Hampton Park Hustlers will have two more stars in their lineup while facing league-leading Esquimalt Universal Sheet Metal in the second game of South Island Senior "B" Lacrosse League action Sunday at Pearkes Arena.

Hustlers, who have a 3-1 record and occupy second place, have added former Victoria Shamrocks stars Mike Beaulac and goalie George Grover to their lineup since dropping a 17-11 decision to Esquimalt in their first clash.

Esquimalt is unbeaten in four games.

Hustlers and Esquimalt meet at 8 p.m. while the other two teams in the league, Victoria Athletics and Saanich, clash at 6.

Elks on Move In Stuffy Race

Elks, led by the two-hit pitching of Ernie Holness, moved ahead of Sooke Merchants in the battle for second place in the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League by blanking Batesons 7-0 Thursday at Central Park.

Mike Lee led Elk hitters with a single and a double to score three times.

In the Heywood Men's League, Ron Maber hit a double and a two singles to score three runs and Ken Geary had two singles to score three times as Capital Radiators downed Remco Office Systems 7-2 at Heywood Avenue Park.

At Hyacinth Park, Kay Thorne pitched a three-hitter to lead MacDonald's Furniture to an 8-0 win over Butler Brothers and Victoria Athletics topped Strawberry Vale Juniors 5-3 in Victoria Senior Women's League games.

Boxla Race Tightens; Bellies Top Burrards

NEW WESTMINSTER — New Westminster Salmonbellies will have a chance to move into a first-place tie with Victoria Shamrocks and Vancouver Burrards when they meet Victoria Shamrocks in a Western Lacrosse Association game in Victoria Saturday night.

Salmonbellies Thursday defeated the Mann Cup champion Burrards 21-17 to level their record at 3-3, two points behind Shamrocks and Burrards and in a tie with Nanaimo Timbermen.

Kenny Brown scored four goals and had three assists to spark the Salmonbelly attack. John Hannah, Daryl McColl, Mark Tuura, Mario Govorchin and Brian Tasker each had two goals.

Doug Hayes, Ron Pinder and John Krgovich led the Burrards with three goals each, while Bill Foote, Taki Vohalis and Bill Rawson added two apiece.

Ted Gernaey made 30 saves for New Westminster while Brad Berrow and Joe Musial combined to stop 33 shots for Vancouver.

Salmonbellies led 8-7 at the end of the first period and 17-13 after two.

In Saturday's other game, Nanaimo hosts Coquitlam and, if both New Westminster and Nanaimo win, it would create a four-way tie at the top.

KERN OUT, WILSON IN

Victoria Budgets, down to a pair of pitchers last weekend, are back to three today but No. 4, the big guy, is on the sidelines again.

Stan (the Colonel) Kern has suffered recurrence of an old back injury.

Defending Canadian senior men's champions, Budgets played a four-game Northwest Fastball League series in Seattle with Andy Konopacki and rookie Larry Cole as the only available pitchers.

Dave Wilson, a rookie acquisition from Ontario, was given time off to return to the East and pick up a bride.

Wilson was expected back today and will be on the firing line at the weekend when Budgets meet Vancouver's Thirsk 79ers at Royal Athletic Park. The four-game series opens with a Saturday doubleheader, starting at 7 p.m., and the usual Sunday afternoon windup, starting at 1.

Bullets Finally Win a Final Game

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — After nine straight losses in the National Basketball Association's championship finals, Washington Bullets have finally won one, beating Seattle SuperSonics 106-98 Thursday night.

Forwards Bobby Dandridge and Elvin Hayes bounced back from poor performances in Sunday's series opener to score 34 and 25 points, respectively.

"We followed our game plan perfectly," said Washington coach Dick Motta. "We got the ball down low to Elvin and Bobby D, where it belongs, and we crashed the boards."

Seattle centre Marvin Webster saw something more.

"They were looking to prove something tonight," said Webster.

Third game will be played here Sunday.

Brooke Sneaks Home a Winner

Some clever dodging by Gary Brooke paved the way to victory as Gorge Hotel squeezed past Greaves Movers 4-3 in Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League action Thursday at Lambrick Park.

JIMMY RUTLEDGE, AT 18, TURNING PROFESSIONAL

Jimmy Rutledge, a young man with a penchant for doing things in a hurry, is going to be one of Canada's youngest golf professionals.

Rutledge, who will celebrate his 19th birthday on Aug. 26, declared Thursday that he is giving up his amateur status.

Youngest (at 14) ever to win the City Junior and the youngest (17) to capture the Island Open championship, the Oak Bay High grad will bid for a Canadian Professional Golfers Association playing card at the CPGA school in Ashburn, Ont., June 5-8.

Winner of the Canadian junior championship last year and a member at both Cedar Hill and Uplands, Rutledge says he doesn't plan to campaign on the United States tour "at least until next year."

If he can win his CPGA card, Rutledge will return to Victoria, "play a few tournaments around here and maybe try the Arizona mini-tour in July."

He leaves for the CPGA school on Wednesday.

Wind Blocks Fishing In Some Island Spots

Wind has stiffled fishing in a few areas around Vancouver Island during the past week but returns from both fresh and salt water during the calm periods have been good.

Ralph Bradshaw landed the top catch of the week at Sooke when he boated three chinooks weighing 23, 11¼ and 5¾ pounds Tuesday off Otter Point. He was using minnows on a deep line.

Secretary Island is yielding some smaller chinooks which top off at 10 pounds.

Waters between Beechey Head and Aldridge Point, however, must rate as tops on the Island this week.

Phil Hale caught the first chinook over 40 pounds this year when he boated a 42-pounder in that area Wednesday. In addition, he took a 26½-pounder and a 21½-pounder the same trip while trolling strip and minnow in the middle of the day.

Wednesday also proved to be productive at Pedder Bay, where John Erglis weighed in two chinooks weighing 23 and 14½ pounds after fishing the area of Church Island with strip.

Both Church and Christopher Point have yielded some good-sized catches on bait, one to two pounds of lead and 60 to 100 feet of line.

Fishermen working out of Oak Bay have been landing chinooks to 20 pounds on Chain Flats.

Chinooks to 21 pounds have been landed off Saanichton Spit by fishermen trolling minnows without a flasher on 80 feet of line and with one pound of lead.

The Powder Wharf area off James Island has also been a favorite spot with jiggers landing chinooks to 18 pounds on Stingsildas. Coal Island waters are producing chinooks to 12 pounds on strip trolled with a flasher.

Strip has worked best to catch chinooks to 18 pounds off Wain Rock, in Satellite Channel, between Hatch and Whiskey points and along the north side of Pat Bay.

Blues seem scarcer in the middle part of Saanich Inlet but some chinooks to 17 pounds have turned up near Bamberton and The Boulder.

The "front" part of Goldstream Island and Stone House waters have yielded chinooks to 20 pounds along with some blues to three pounds in recent days.

Further up-Island, chinooks weighing as much as 14 pounds have turned up off Bold Bluff and the area under the power line between Maple Bay and Crofton has produced chinooks to 25½ for both trollers and moochers.

Small chinooks and numerous blues nearing the five-pound mark are showing off the north end of Big Finger Island near Nanaimo.

Blues to four pounds are providing brisk action well offshore (two to three miles at Bates Beach and Cape Lazo.

At Campbell River, chinooks to 25 pounds are turning up off Cape Mudge, Quathiaski Cove, April Point, Copper Bluff as well as over at Toba Inlet. Blues are nearing the five-pound mark at Mitlenatch Island, Butler Point and near the Red and Gray cam buoys.

Trout fishing was red hot for about one day last weekend in most low-elevation lakes and streams after a black ant hatch. But the trout soon gorged themselves and probably won't be actively feeding until this weekend.

NIBBLES: Ron Perks won first prize in the first Chinook Club Sunburn Derby of the season Sunday with an 11:03-pounder ... Frank Jenvey (10:10) and Bob Redgrave (9:14) were second and third, respectively ... Hidden-weight winners were Gary Vaughan and Larry Cuthburt.

"Well, at least we now know why you were a cook in the navy!"

It's only May, but Bill Madlock is starting to get that old pennant fever again. This time, though, he really believes it's more than a 24-hour virus.

"I've been on a lot of teams who have had good starts," said the one-time Chicago third baseman who now patrols second base for San Francisco Giants. "When I was with the Cubs, if the pennant races were decided in May, I'd have had three championship rings. But this team has one thing that those teams didn't have, and that's the pitching."

The Giants had it Thursday, Ed Halicki shackling Houston Astros on six hits while Jack Clark drove in four runs in San Francisco's 9-1 romp.

The Cubs had it, too, Rick Reuschel three-hitting Philadelphia for six innings before his elbow stiffened and Bruce Sutter came out of the bullpen to slam the door in Chicago's 5-1 triumph over the Phils.

So the two teams which finished as also-rans a year ago are 1½-game leaders in their respective divisions, the Giants in the West ahead of Cincinnati and the Cubs in the East over Philadelphia.

In two other National League baseball games Thursday, Montreal Expos routed St. Louis Cardinals 11-2 and New York Mets edged Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2 in 11 innings.

In the American League, California pitcher Frank Tanana became major league's first eight-game winner of the season when he hurled a four-hitter for a 6-0 Angels win over Chicago White Sox.

Elsewhere, Baltimore Orioles nipped Detroit Tigers 2-1, Boston Red Sox beat Toronto Blue Jays 9-5, New York Yankees beat Cleveland Indians 9-3, Texas Rangers defeated Minnesota Twins 7-1 and Kansas City Royals beat Seattle Mariners 9-4.

Jim Rice ended an 0-for-11 slump with a three-run homer, and Dwight Evans hit a two-run blast to lead Boston past Toronto, which has lost five of its last six games.

"I don't know about other people, but we've been believers all along," said Giants veteran Willie McCovey. "I always felt this pitching staff was potentially the best in the league, and that was even before we got Vida Blue."

NO COACH, NO VISIT

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — The U.S. men's volleyball team, accusing the Chinese of "political shenanigans," has cancelled its June tour of China.

"What began as a friendly tour at their invitation has become a political hassle," coach Doug Beal said. The U.S. men's and women's teams were invited to play a series of matches in China June 3-18. But the Chinese refused to permit Arie Selinger, coach of the women's team, to go on the tour because she was travelling under an Israeli passport. Selinger has coached the team for three years.

Salt Spring Is Where the Work Is AROUND OUR SHORES

pat dufour

The Salt Spring Island Sailing Club will not be holding its usual Swiftsure weekend invitational regatta this year for a very good reason — the members will be busy getting their new property at Walter Bay in shape.

The small club has taken on a $100,000 project that several larger clubs would hesitate to tackle. The property has an old house on it that will gradually be renovated and refurbished for a clubhouse. The members have raised $30,000 through individual $1,000 debentures and the rest is covered by a bank loan.

Using nothing but volunteer labor, the members have built 44 modern six-by-eight feet concrete floats that were put into place this week. They're now working on another 30.

Commodore Peter McMillan deserves a lot of credit for inspiring his fellow sailors to take the plunge and as Bill Cannon says of the volunteers, "they've done a phenominal thing." He's right.

While many boats from the Canoe Bay Sailing Club will be racing in the Juan de Fuca classic this weekend other club boats will be having a 29-miler of their own, starting at 9 a.m. Saturday — the same time as the Swiftsure start.

Gordie Inglis, who's raced a few Juan de Fucas himself, will be one of those taking part in the 29-mile event. Elizabeth Martman will be another. She'll be sailing the family boat, Sunshine, while husband Gordie crews aboard Cam Thomson's Cal-Lorri in Juan de Fuca. Other CBSC boats in Juan de Fuca include Bill Martin's Georgia Girl and J.K. Martin's Sana.

Out in the Sidney area, dinghy sailors of the Saanich Peninsula Sailing Association will have series racing again at Tulista Park on Sunday, starting at 2 p.m. Officer of the day is Tom Alexander.

Dinghy sailors of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will also have series racing on Sunday. Things get under way at 1 p.m.

Hans Hendel's Sandpiper was over-all winner in last week's race for cruising class boats, edging out Doug Turnham's Baracoutta and Fred Douglas' Vertu. In Sailerettes it was 'Doc' Beaudry's Black Hawk, followed by Rod Ives' White Swan and Guy Boucher's Blue Goose.

Another event which begins this weekend in the Inner Harbor could make accommodation difficult for Swiftsure and Juan de Fuca boats. Beginning today, Jeremy Hewett of Victoria Boat Mart Ltd. at West Bay Marina is staging the first full-scale floating used boat show on the west coast.

The show, which will go on until Sept. 3 or until each boat is sold, will feature power and sail cruising boats, ocean-cruising vessels and multihulls. Jeremy is hoping to attract many Americans, now that the currency makes buying here even more attractive and says people wanting to sell boats should contact him at 383-1914.

His company has about 100 boats already listed for sale and plans are to have the boats moored at Fishermen's Wharf and at any other available space around the harbor, boat-owners paying their own moorage with an additional charge for caretaking and cleanup of their craft.

It sounds like a good idea but I would be happier if he had postponed the start of the show for a few days. In the years I've raced Swiftsure and Juan de Fuca it's been tough enough to find space. With a record 370 boats this year it's going to be even more of a challenge.

The Turkey Head Sailing Association will have series racing again on Tuesday, beginning at 6:30 p.m. in waters off Oak Bay Marina. Over-all winner last week was Ron Saunders' Irrawaddy, followed by Jeff Buck's Buckshot and Garry Cooney's Hocus. Ted Trenholme's Impatience and Jack Trueman's L'Chaiin tied for fourth spot. Next came Sandy McMillan's Amber Green, Gary Jacobi's Salty Dream, Rod Andrews and Rick Parkinson's Piute Logic, Bill Himgley's Quintango, Bob Callow's Minstrel and James Williams' Achilles.

The Royal Victoria Yacht Club will resume Wednesday night series racing again this week. Start time is also 6:30 p.m.

Commander Gerry Davis heads the new executive of the Victoria Power Squadron following the recent election at RVYC. Formed in 1958, the squadron has as many sailboat enthusiasts as power boaters and is one of the three largest in Canada.

Also elected were executive officer Gordon James, training officer Nick Yasey, secretary Bob Rose, treasurer Al Kyle, administration officer Glead Weidner, assistant training officers Douglas James, Bob Chapman and Jim Gillies; training cruise chairman Peter Boldt, Binnacle editor Patricia Gye and program chairman Paul Sutherland.

SHORT TACKS — Bouquet of the week has to go to the Portland boat, Pegasus, coskippered by Jack and Gene Becker. Up for Swiftsure again, they won the Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet section of the 1978 285-mile Victoria International from Astoria. The only two boats ahead of Pegasus were racing International Offshore Rule and she would have beaten them on handicap had there been an over-all trophy.

The race up here was no breeze. At one time they were knocked down under spinnaker and a foredeck crew found himself waist deep in water. The gale-force winds put so much strain on the tiller it fractured. Exhaustion and sea sickness added to the problems; yet, when the gutsy C and C 30 tied up in the Inner Harbor, she was neat as the proverbial pin. That takes a heck of a lot of determination and pride.

Mt. Doug Net Champs

Mt. Douglas captured the inaugural Victoria-area high school tennis championships Thursday, topping a combined St. Michael's University School-Norfolk House team 7-4 at Henderson Park.

The win also gives Mt. Doug a berth in the British Columbia tournament next weekend in Vancouver.

Kerry Chan won the boys' singles championship to set the pace for Mt. Doug, which also dominated doubles play.

Dan Smith and Joe Haegert won two sets in the boys' doubles and clubmates Liz Ellis and Jeanine Prince followed suit in the girls' doubles. Sandy and Joan Wharf won one girls' set and Steve Roe and Randy Trytten won one boys' set.

Jennifer Bland captured the girls' singles crown for St. Michael's-Norfolk and combined with Dave Murrell to defeat Chan and Andrea Levey in the mixed doubles.

By FRED KARPIN

In today's deal, our East defender "fought the good fight" in trying to prevent South from discarding a loser. But East was operating under circumstances beyond his control, and fell victim to South's winning line of play.

North-South vulnerable. North deals.

Opening lead: Two of ♠.

Had West led any suit but spades, declarer would have had no trouble in fulfilling his contract, since he would have been able to discard his four of spades on one of dummy's top hearts. But West found the killing lead when he opened a spade. East's jack was taken by South's ace.

Since South figures to lose a trump trick to the defenders' king, he had to get rid of his losing spade before attacking the trump suit. At trick two he cashed his king of hearts, after which he led his remaining heart to dummy's ace. Next came the queen of hearts — which East ruffed with the six-spot. South overruffed with the nine.

Now came a diamond to dummy's king, and the jack of hearts was led. But, once again, East, refusing to allow South to discard his losing spade, ruffed with his seven of trumps. south overruffed with the ten.

Declarer then led the three of trumps, and when West followed suit with a low trump, overtook the three with the board's ace, felling East's king. So what looked like a sure trump trick to east at the outset had vanished.

After felling East's king of trumps, declarer played the eight of trumps and overtook it with his jack. The queen of trumps then picked up West's last trump. Reaching dummy via the diamond jack, South discarded his losing spade on dummy's fifth heart. A diamond lead now enabled South to cash his ace and queen. And so South made all 13 tricks.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis on romantic differences, lover's quarrel, sparks, inspiration, personal magnetism, new friends and creative interests. Break free from restrictions. Refuse to be bullied by children or any persons.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Communicate, write, express yourself, welcome chances for change, variety, travel. Relationship intensifies. Superior contacts you, says you can make room for yourself at top. Respond: Okay, consider it done, with proper title and financial compensation, of course!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Lunar aspects coincide now with movement, travel, interruption in course of education or instruction, change in family situation. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently — so does the number 6.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone wants your money. Protect, conserve, be realistic — that is what you know you should do. However, elements of flattery, romance, glamor, deception enter. Cash should exit. You are forewarned. The rest is up to you!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be positive concerning legal implications, rights, permissions. Capricorn, Cancer figure prominently — so does the number 8. Take conservative course. Avoid basing actions on impulse. Spotlight on relationship with partner or mate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish what you start. Improve relations with headstrong Aries associate. What had been hidden could be revealed — with force. Maintain steady pace, be familiar with basic terms, duties. Co-worker reveals unusual hobby.

Leo is very much in picture. Day is not without complications. Topping all, you could fall madly in love!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Regain sense of direction. You will know which way to go! . . if you are not swayed, dismayed by chorus of dissenting voices. Pay attention to one sound, the voice from within. Give yourself a chance — and you will hear it. Cancer, Aquarius individuals figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid traffic, if possible. If you must drive, take special care. If you can possibly walk instead of being in your auto — do so. Nothing fatalistic, but aura of confusion seems present. Relative chimes in, is in obvious mood to argue. Remain calm, cool. Have fun at social event.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money "situation" is brought into focus. You benefit. Scorpio figures prominently — so does the number 4. Individual close to you has budget plan which is worthy of attention. Know it, act accordingly. Be thorough, check between the lines, refuse to give up something for nothing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take initiative in making changes. Strive for progress, modernize dress, display and distribution. Partner or mate appears impatient. Don't compound error. Pleasant suprise due — possibly from member of opposite sex.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get chance to hold open discussion with family. Harmony can be restored — fears, doubts can be eradicated. You could be on brink of discovery, greater happiness and increased potential for success. Taurus, Libra and number 6 figure prominently.

IF MAY 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are forthright, aggressive, have sense of humor and drama. You are fond of travel, a good fight when the cause is right. The opposite sex finds you attractive; you are flattered, wined, dined and "spoiled." Aries, Libra persons play key roles in your life. May should have been outstanding this year — there will be a new start, more independence, creativity and love in July.

"You can't miss our house. Ours is the only one on the odd number side with green shutters," said Charlie. "Look us up next weekend."

Colin smiled. "Thanks, but don't you have a house number?"

"Sure, and I'll give you a gimmick for it," Charlie replied. "All the odd numbers above us total just seven timesall the ones below us on our side."

What was the number?

Lack of Seatbelt Chops Injury Pay

An Oak Bay woman who failed to wear a seatbelt has had $1,800 knocked off a damage award in a B.C. Supreme Court judgment.

Beverly Ann Burgess was awarded $15,000 damages by Mr. Justice J.G. Ruttan for knee and abdomen injuries caused by a traffic accident Nov. 18, 1975, at Newport and McNeill.

But she would have received $16,800 had she been wearing her seatbelt.

Court sources said this is not the first time courts have held that failure to wear seatbelts can be contributory negligence if it can be shown the injuries could have been prevented or lessened by wearing a seatbelt.

Ruttan, in his judgment, found George William Parker of Victoria responsible for the accident in not surrendering right of way and not keeping a proper lookout.

"However, he is not thereby necessarily liable to pay for all the damages sustained if part of those damages were caused by the plaintiff's own negligence, not in her driving, but in failing to protect herself where she could have by use of a safety belt," said Ruttan.

"If the injuries were such that a seatbelt would have minimized their effect, then she must accept part of the responsibility for failure to look out for herself. Still, the major responsibility remains with the defendant (Parker) whose behavior set in motion the train of events that led to and caused the accident."

Mrs. Burgess suffered serious gastro-intestinal injuries and a torn ligament in her knee which has left her with a slight permanent limp. Neither she nor Parker were wearing seatbelts.

A medical specialist said if she had been wearing a seatbelt, the force of the blow to her abdomen caused by the steering wheel would have been diminished but he also said one can get an abdominal injury from the belt itself. He agreed that if she had been wearing her seatbelt the blow would have been less traumatic but he was not prepared to say it would have totally obviated the injury.

Ruttan ruled failure to use a seatbelt contributed to the abdomen injury and he attached responsibility at 20 per cent as her share of the negligence. Damages for the abdomen injury alone were accordingly reduced to $7,200 from $9,000.

Drugs Seized

LONDON (AP) — Police say they have cracked two major drug smuggling rings and have seized cocaine and heroin worth $900,000. Scotland Yard said the seizures included liquid cocaine worth $250,000.

MILITARY LAW 'CURBS RIGHTS'

EDMONTON (CP) — Canada's National Defence Act was taken to task Wednesday by a lawyer appealing the Esquimalt military conviction of two servicemen.

Appearing for the men, who were court-martialed in the fall of 1976, David A. Haas argued that the military code of discipline should operate within the framework of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

However, the court made no comments on the Bill of Rights when it dismissed Cpl. Robert Allan Ganner's appeal on the ground's there was no misscarriage of justice in the military trial.

A new trial was ordered on two of five charges against the other defendent, Cpl. Joseph Slyvio Dalrymple.

Ganner and Dalrymple were dismissed from the Canadian Forces and imprisoned for 18 months and 12 months on charges related to fraud and theft from the Junior Ranks Club. The two had been administering the club.

Hearing the appeal were Mr. Justice H. F. Gibson from the federal court trial division in Ottawa, Mr. Justice G. C. Hall of the Manitoba Court of Appeal and Mr. Justice L. T. Pennell from the Ontario Supreme Court.

Chinese Opera Here

The first Chinese opera company to visit Victoria in 20 years will perform at McPherson Playhouse next Friday and Saturday.

The program, sponsored by the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association, is part of the Chinese community's contribution towards the Capt. Cook Bicentennial Celebrations.

Peter Wong, spokesman for the association, said all the performers are professional actresses from Hong Kong.

One of the spectacular aspects of Chinese operas are the beautiful silk costumes worn by the actresses.

Friday's opera, entitled The Emperor's Daughter, starts at 7 p.m. It's a tragic story, starting with Manchu soldiers entering Peking in 1644, and the death of Emperor Sung-ching and members of the royal family.

The Saturday opera, entitled The Supernatural Love Story, starts at 7.30 p.m.

It is the story of Li Waileung, a girl from a poor family, who is sold to chancellor Ka Chee-tao as his concubine. She is killed by him when he discovers that she is in love with a scholar name Pui-yu.

Before The Judge

Judge Blake Allan gave a 17-year-old a break in Victoria provincial court Thursday after learning that the youth was a good student and had no previous trouble with the law.

Allan found Russell Alan Court, 2822 Colquitz, guilty of assault by trespassing and gave him a suspended sentence.

Court and two companions entered the McDonald's Restaurant in Colwood about midnight, Nov. 26, but were asked to leave shortly afterwards.

Employees felt that the three were rowdy and two of them were throwing ice. They refused and began shouting and swearing, court was told, and Colwood RCMP were finally called.

James Christopher Wilson, an employee, testified the incident occurred close to midnight. Wilson said he asked Court to leave but that Court refused. Wilson said he grabbed Court by the arm but was pushed off. He said Court used strong language and was loud, disturbing the customers. Three other employees were called but before the three customers could be removed from the building, Court grabbed Wilson's tie.

"I'm sorry to see a young man like you," Allan said prior to his verdict. "But when you go out to a public place, you're expected to act like a gentleman."

Allan was informed Court is a Grade 12 student at Victoria High and plans to attend Camosun College this fall.

Frank Peter Ellis, 59, pleaded guilty before Judge Harold Alder to causing a disturbance by shouting.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Victoria city police were called Wednesday to Christ Church Cathedral, 912 Vancouver, at about 4 p.m.

Laughton suggested that Alder did not need to hear the criminal record belonging to Ellis — which covers six pages — and that the judge was quite familiar with Ellis.

"Why don't you get a job there (Wilkinson Road jail) and swear off the booze?" Alder asked before sentencing Ellis to 30 days in jail.

A 56-year-old man whose life in jail began in 1938 when he was 16 was given a nine-month term for theft under $200.

Vernon Charles Reid, 1037 Wychbury, pleaded guilty to the charge and Laughton told the court Reid was caught in someone else's car May 10 and had removed a portable scanning receiver valued at $140.

Laughton said Reid's criminal history began in 1938 when he received 15 months for 11 counts of breaking and entering. Reid received four-year jail terms for breaking and entering in 1955 and 1957, a three-year sentence in Calgary in 1948 for forgery, and 2½-year terms for theft in 1948 and breaking and entering in 1961.

Legal-aid lawyer Brian MacKenzie said Reid had been drinking wine that evening. MacKenzie also stated that Reid was now willing to take the Alouette River prison program for treatment of alcoholism and Alder said he would recommend it.

Rare World Globes Recall Cook's Discovery

elizabeth forbes

There's nothing like them in this part of the world.

Therefore, the recent acquisition of two historic world globes is a distinct feather in the cap of the Maritime Museum of B.C.

Keith Cameron, museum director, explains these globes are a gift from the estate of the late Philip Rogers, through his wife Jean, now Mrs. G. Milburn, 3275 Ripon Rd.

Mrs. Milburn tells you "we discovered them in London, shortly after the Second World War."

They were commissioned in the mid-1800s by the Royal Geographic Society and dedicated to Joseph Banks, member of a scientific party with Capt. James Cook on his first voyage of discovery in 1768.

As Cameron briefly describes them, one globe shows constellations as they were observed in 1800 with signs of the zodiac included.

The other is a terrestial globe showing land masses and oceans as observed during Cook's three voyages, ending in 1807.

These companion pieces, complete with rosewood stands and compasses, are now strategically placed on the second floor of the museum.

Another gift of which Cameron speaks with much pride is made up of some 140 prints by long-ago artists, including Jacob Weber, who was with Cook on his voyages.

These prints, a gift from Mr. and Mrs. T. Gervasse Chambers, Constance Avenue, are of events surrounding those voyages of exploration and of other early explorers.

Their discovery came about years ago, Mrs. Chambers says, when members of her husband's family bought an old house named The Priory in Bristol, England.

"They were found in an apple shed at the back of that house," she explains, "and they were over a century old then."

A few years ago, when Mrs. Chambers visited England she was shown the prints by a cousin, Elfrida Whidborne, and asked what should be done with them.

Her answer was "give them to me and we'll put them in Victoria's Maritime Museum."

It took the cousin over two years to make up her mind but "finally we did get them," Mrs. Chambers says, "and they are now preserved for all time."

Because of the fragile condition of some of the prints, originals are not being shown at present, Cameron tells you.

Rather, through "a very find method of reproduction," copies have been hung on the second-floor walls in the museum, with explanations of the scenes depicted.

Still another recent gift related to the Cook voyages is a painting of his ships, Resolution and Discovery, in Resolution Cove, as the Indian people must have seen them.

The artist is F. W. (Bill) Maximick of Courtenay, a logger and commercial fisherman, self taught and with an ambition to eventually paint full time.

Cameron met Maximick and saw his paintings, all featuring marine scenes, in 1976. Through that contact, a showing was set up in the Maritime Museum last year.

As a gesture of appreciation for this interest in his art, Maximick has now presented his Resolution Cove picture to the museum.

The painting is exact in every detail, even to correct movement of currents around the prows of the ship.

On shore can be seen Cook's observation tent, from where he determined latitude and longtitude, a blacksmith using his anvil and men brewing spruce beer, as described in Cook journals.

While in no way connected with the Cook voyages, another recent gift "will be of inestimable value," Cameron says, in the proposed creation of a R. P. Rithet room.

"It's a well-known fact that Rithet figured largely in Victoria's early maritime history," the museum director points out.

"He was heavily involved with shipping, wharves, and warehousing and it seems fitting that a room in which we will recreate some of the story should be named in his honor."

This idea was voiced a short time ago when a friend of Cameron's, Capt. W. Y. Higgs, now living at Gibsons and a member of the Company of Master Mariners of Canada, dropped in for a visit.

Higgs listened and then, much to Cameron's surprise, offered to give antique furniture, made by Weiler Brothers of Victoria in 1875 and used by Rithet in his Wharf Street office, for this proposed room.

Back in the 1920s, Capt. Higgs was doing business with Rithet's company, and in the 1930s obtained financing there for his first towing and salvage fleet, the Higgs Gabriola Ferry Ltd., when Harry Barnes was manager.

In 1943, Higgs was in the Rithet offices when this beautiful solid walnut furniture was about to be sold.

He made an offer. It was accepted and the furniture went up to his Nanaimo offices, close to the Bastion, where it was used until 1961.

When Higgs left Nanaimo to live at Gibsons, the furniture went with him and into storage over there.

Now it is to be returned to the city of its origin.

Pressure on Family

VANCOUVER (CP) — The marriage casualty rate may be as high as four out of five among young executives reaching for the top, says a Vancouver psychologist.

Fred Romanuk, a specialist in management training, said the work load, pressure and travel time that aspiring executives are expected to handle can be devastating to family life.

Romanuk said the young executive's most dangerous years are the early 30s.

"He is trying to solidify himself in the career he wants and he is working like hell to make it. Once he's 35 he wants to feel that he is in the job that he wants to be in.

"When a guy gets married in his middle 20s, for the first few years all appears to go well. Then he gets into this thing of trying to solidify his career. His energy is focused in that direction and it goes away from the family."

Romanuk said that at the same time there is a natural revision of the independence question.

"In their 20s a couple are dependent on each other, but for the next 10 years they are trying to figure out how to be independent. This is the way that most of the breakups happen."

He said it is "critically important" for husband and wife to sit down and really understand the kind of job he has.

"It takes a constant dialogue in terms of her importance to him," he said. "In effect, his job is her biggest competitor. She may even hate it. It's helpful if he spends some quality time at home and demonstrates to her that she is important."

Moving without Nightmares

caveat emptor

By LYNNE GORDON

Moving day can leave the consumer financially in the hole and emotionally frustrated. A million Canadian families pack up and move to a new home each year, and many have nightmare stories to tell about their moving experience.

The household moving industry is trying to clean up its image. Established companies think the problem would be eased if more moves could be made off-season, when staff and trucks are available to handle them.

Seventy-five per cent of all household moves are made between June 15 and September 15. Most of the rest are at month end, usually on weekends. At those times, you are more apt to be a victim of "over-booking" or abandonment. In other words, the companies book too many moves, and can't keep all their commitments. If at all possible, plan your move at other times.

But most consumers don't have the choice. Their apartment lease expires, school term ends, vacations start and new jobs begin right at peak season. If you fall into this category, you should book your moving date with a reputable company as far in advance as you can. Check the mover's reputation with the Better Business Bureau, your friends, neighbors and business associates.

Ask about the quality of their service, not the price of the move. Any agent can give you a low estimate, which is called "low-balling," but he's not bound by that "guestimate." You'll find that the price of a long-distance move is determined by the weight of the load (measured on official scales after the van is loaded), multiplied by the distance it is carried. Any legitimate agent can give you an estimate accurate to within five per cent of the load, if you show him everything that is to go. Insist that he telephone you if there is a revised estimate when the van is weighed, so you can be ready at the point of delivery with cash or a certified cheque in full. Otherwise, the mover won't deliver. You'll have to pay for warehouse storage and a new delivery charge when you finally do have the cash ready.

This can pile up to a staggering sum. You walk right into the trap when you believe a "low-ball" estimate, and you are not prepared for the hefty final bill at the other end.

The mover's liability and the owner's insurance are problems in long-distance moving, too. Carriers insist that the customer release them from any liability beyond 30 cents a pound for goods damaged in transit. Your antique morris chair, weighing in at 50 pounds nd smashed to splinters, would get you $15. And your household insurance does not usually cover goods in transit. So you must arrange to get a separate policy from the mover (or your own insurance agent) for the full value of your goods.

To support your insurance claims, make sure that your bill of lading has all the information written down, including all extra costs, packing, unloading, added insurance, delivery date and a detailed list of contents. Note what pieces are marked, chipped or scarred. And don't sign at the other end until you have checked thoroughly for fresh damage or loss.

Claims are always frustrating, but without proof on paper they are impossible. If you are in a hurry, or haven't had a chance to inspect everything thoroughly, write "acknowledge receipt of goods only; not yet inspected," or add the words "subject to hidden damage."

As soon as you have assessed the loss or damage in detail, notify the carrier in writing, so that proper forms can be forwarded to you and returned properly. This is the area that creates the most moving bitterness.

Bio-dex

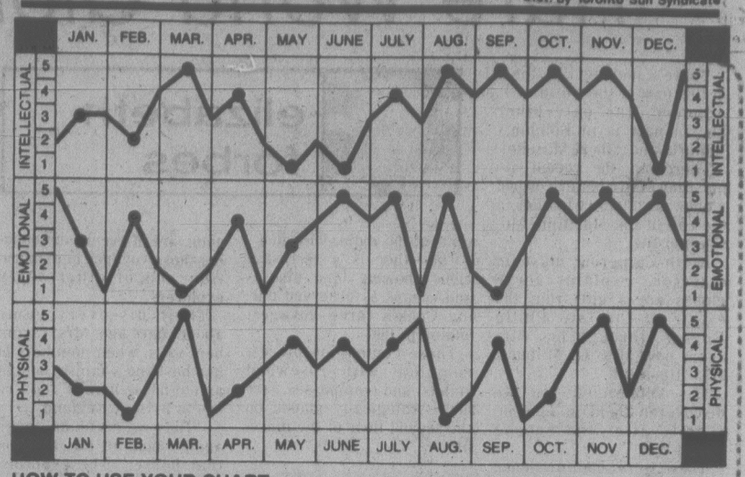
Your computerized biorhythm

© Copyright 1977

Dist. by Toronto Sun Syndicate



HOW TO USE YOUR CHART:

BIO-DEX READOUT:

0-5 Negative Cycle- Keep your wallet closed tightly. You're in no shape to recognize a real bargain.

6-10 Neutral Cycle- A career opportunity could come up if you keep your ears open.

11-15 Positive Cycle- Your willpower is at its peak and you can resist that "temptation".

One of the key biorhythm cycles that we all take for granted is the daily pattern of sleep. Your body tells you when it is ready for sleep and you should not ignore those signs. As a youngster I was able to operate on far less sleep than I need now. Often, when my physical level is down, I try to catch an odd hour of sleep during the day. Try it yourself next time your physical cycle goes critical (around 1 or 2 points), and see how much it helps.

Eating Like a King on Cattails

MOTHER EARTH NEWS

Don't let the high price of food get you down. Not when you can do like Mother reader Clarice Rainey and pick a mess of cattail stems and eat like a king for free.

You've undoubtedly seen cattails in nearby streams or marshes, but it's unlikely that you've ever eaten (or even heard of) cattail corn, Cossack asparagus or reed mace flower.

Surprsingly, the common cattail (Typha latifola) is a highly nutritious and very versatile source of food. Its stems can be prepared as a vegetable, the pollen can be used in bread recipes, the flower spikes can be cooked like corn, the bulbous shoots at the base of the stems are delicious when boiled, and the roots can be processed into a rich and highly palatable flower.

What makes the cattail a particularly valuable wild food resource, however, is that — unlike many other forageables — it grows throughout North America and cannot be mistaken for another plant. Even the novice forager can easily recognize the cattail's slender stalks and cigar-shaped flower spokes.

While it's true that reed mace (as cattails are sometimes called) can be harvested year-round, the delicacy known as Cossack asparagus is best prepared from two- to three-foot long shoots gathered in the spring. Simply grab the young plant near the water level and pull. You'll find that you've liberated a section of stem about a foot in length (and left the plant's roots in the ground). If you peel back a few layers of "skin" from this stem, you'll soon come to a pale-greenish "core" that can be cooked and eaten just like asparagus.

With the arrival of early summer comes another taste treat: cattail corn. To prepare this delicacy, pick the plant's seed heads when they're still in the sheath. Husk off the sheaths, boil the bud-studded heads as you would fresh corn on the cob, and (just before serving) dip the heads in melted butter. You'll find the flavor is very similar to that of the roasting ears to which the reed mace heads are very closely related.

Design Traces Spine Curve

The design of moire silk, with its typical swirling pattern, is now being ingeniously used for the diagnosis of curvatures of the spine.

Dr. Gordon W. D. Armstrong and his colleagues at the University of Ottawa are now photographing children through a screen of threads. These threads cast contour line shadows (similar to a moire pattern) which, when interpreted, give early evidence of curvatures.

The technique, known as moire photography, is inexpensive, reliable and does not require the usual exposure to X-rays.

Almost 1,000 boys and girls, between the ages of 10 and 12, were studied by this method. It is so successful that it will be employed more and more because it holds great promise.

Automobile accidents are, of course, devastating to babies who are not properly protected with harnesses and safety devices.

A group of pediatricians in Tennessee have co-ordinated their efforts to exert political pressure on their legislature to enact laws that will reduce so many of these unnecessary deaths. The doctors, in conjunction with local and national medical organizations, have been responsible for a state law that now requires parents of children under four years of age to equip family cars with approved restraint systems.

Large public education programs are calling attention to this law which, after June, 1978, will carry punishment and fine if the safety devices are not used. The law is a testimonial to the good judgment of the doctors who initiated the program and the legisators who were receptive to this excellent idea.

Fractures of the long bones of the body sometimes fail to knit and heal. The cause of such non-union is sometimes elusive. Many techniques have been devised for this purpose.

Now, a newly conceived idea is being used with excellent results by Dr. C. Andrew L. Bassett. He and his fellow research workers at the Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital in New York City have treated more than 200 patients with non-union fractures.

First a cast is applied. Then, using an electric generator, a current is passed to the fractured site. Apparently, the electricity stimulates bone cells to regenerate and start the knitting process. The results in animals and in humans seem to suggest that the method is a safe one and holds enormous potential for this and other related orthopedic problems.

Many of the patients whose healing has been unaffected by other methods are benefiting from this new concept.

MOTHERS WARNED

HALIFAX (CP) — Five decades of research point to a link between fetal abnormalities and smoking by pregnant women yet education of women on the danger remains inadequate, Agnes Choi-Lao, assistant professor at Ottawa University told a health conference here.

A survey of more than 400 Canadian health organizations showed 20 per cent gave formal smoking education in pre-natal classes.

"Some of these organizations didn't see smoking as an important part of pre-natal training," she said.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, who is in a home for unwed mothers, has decided to put her baby up for adoption. She's not even sure who the baby's father is, so I think she's doing the right thing. (She's only 14.) She doesn't even want to see the baby after it's born. She says it will be easier to forget if she doesn't.

Abby, even though it would be a lie, what harm would there be in telling her that her baby died at birth? I wouldn't ask the doctor to tell the lie — I will take all the responsibility myself. I just want the doctor and the people at the hospital where she will have the baby to back me up on my story.

My daughter has suffered enough already, and it will be much easier for her if she thinks that her baby died. Then she won't have to go through life wondering where her child is. I can see only good in this lie, but if you think I'm wrong, please tell me why and I'll do as you say. Thank you. — HEARTSICK.

DEAR HEARTSICK: Although your intentions are good, you can't accomplish good through evil acts. Please, dear, abandon this dishonest scheme. Regardless of how well-intentioned it is, it's wrong.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't think I am bragging, but my problem is that I am too attractive. When I was in high school I never had any girlfriends because they were all afraid I'd take their boyfriends away from them. When I went to work I had to quit one job after another because my bosses were forever making passes at me. Now that I am married, I have the same problem.

All of my husband's friends proposition me, and I have to tell them off. And we don't have any married couples to go around with because the wives are afraid of the competition. Sometimes I wish I were born ugly. What's the solution? — "RED."

DEAR "RED": Face it, dear, if you aren't consciously inviting the attentions of the opposite sex, you must be doing so unconsciously. No man in his right mind makes a pass at a statue. He needs some encouragement. A woman who has to beat off every man she meets should find out why.

DEAR ABBY: I recently became engaged to a very pretty girl. She's from a good family and so am I. All our friends and relatives think we are just right for each other, but the more I see of her, the more doubts I have about how this marriage would work out.

She can be sweet as honey one minute and very sullen and pouty the next. She has at times revealed a side of herself that I never saw before. She's spoiled, demanding and selfish. And stubborn, too. I'm not saying I'm perfect, but I don't think I could take this girl's unpredictable moodiness for a lifetime.

What I am trying to ask, my Dear Abigail, is this: How does a gentleman break an engagement? — IN DEEP.

DEAR IN: The same way a lady breaks one. He simply tells his intended in the kindest manner possible that he's decided to keep his bachelor button and forego the orange blossoms. You may be in for a few unpleasant moments, but you'll both survive it.

HIGH FASHION COPIES PUNK LOOK

PARIS (AP) — Punk may have faded with the Sex Pistols but its quirky styles seem to have nudged the doyens of French high fashion to step back 15 years in style and resurrect the thin tie.

Thanks to Punk's stringy '50-ish look, thin's in this year and many leading Paris couturiers are snipping down to narrower lapels, petite shirt collars and reduced flair on trousers.

"Punk is responsible for launching a new style," said Madeleine LeClerc, spokeswoman for French designer Ted Lapidus.

"High fashion has finally caught up with punk," added Martin de Brock of the French edition of Men's Vogue. "A 30-year-old man can wear his college ties and look in style. They should continue thinning for about three years."

The phenomenon of London styles blowing across the English Channel and winding up on Paris design sheets is nothing new to the breezy world of high fashion.

"Fashion often takes its cue from the young or the excessive," said LeClerc. "St. Laurent's designs of hearts and lips dyed on silk blouses were inspired by kitsch."

Punk has already made visible inroads into women's fashion. Pins, strings, ribbons and leather and visible lingerie have all cropped up in the latest women's fashion.

Though men's designers are generally less fickle than women's.

Over the last 10 years, ties had widened to obesity. In 1968, they were some 4½ inches at their base. By the end of the '60s, another inch was added. Ties got so wide in London they looked like baby bibs.

New Jersey Opens Its First Casino

An elegant new casino opened in this old resort where the Monopoly game got its names. Las Vegas found a serious rival in the East.

New Jersey Gov. Brendan Byrne planned to personally cut the ribbon for the long-awaited opening of the $50 million Resorts international Hotel-Casino and usher in a new era of wheeling and dealing on the famous old boardwalk.

"We promise to restore Atlantic City as the queen of resorts," Byrne said in announcing the final OK from the Casino Control Commission at a fancy party Thursday night.

"We are in our state enjoying something new," the governor said. "We are taking leadership. I know that all of you are as proud as I am of sharing a part of history."

"This is a great day for Atlantic City — the rebuilding of this great seashore resort," said James Crosby, chairman of Resorts International, which helped finance the campaign to legalize gambling in New Jersey with profits from its other casinos in the Bahamas.

Reese Palley, a bearded millionaire who runs an expensive gift shop in Crosby's hotel, was among the 1,000 VIPs celebrating at Thursday night's pre-opening party.

"It's the only thing I've been involved in that the culmination lives up to the expectation, including sex," he said.

Police were braced for an onslaught of tourists escaping the nearby cities of the urban Northeast over the Memorial Day weekend, but no one knew what to expect.

"I would have to have a crystal ball to predict what will happen," commented Edwin Roth, Atlantic City's public safety director.

CUBANS SET TO QUELL ERITREA

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Large concentrations of Cuban forces have been detected massing on the fringes of Ethiopia's Eritrea province in an apparent prelude to joining the war against secessionist guerrillas, diplomatic sources said today.

The sources also reported an Eritrean guerrilla offensive last week aimed at capturing the city of Barentu, about 100 miles from the Sudanese border, was repulsed with heavy Eritrean casualties.

They said the Cubans were moving in from the Ogaden region of southeastern Ethiopia.

SMITH
. . .task completed

CAPE TOWN (AP) — Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith said today he will retire from politics once the transition to black majority rule in his country is complete.

Smith, who is vacationing in South Africa, told a news conference he expects that national elections ushering in black rule will be held by Dec. 31 as planned, despite the continuing war with black nationalist guerrillas.

"I have no intention of standing in the next election," he said. "By then my task will have been completed and I will have done all I can to reassure the people of Rhodesia."

Smith said the Rhodesian public has reacted to the new multi-racial transitional government in a pragmatic, philosophic and courageous manner. He said the interim government was holding firm and predicted the guerrillas would "wither away" if the internal agreement with black moderates succeeds.

Smith said a committee of security officials and black leaders is working toward a ceasefire.

"They are in contact with certain of the terrorist leaders and although I am disappointed we have not made more and quicker progress, there are encouraging reports coming in now and I believe there is a good chance of success."

Smith said the recent events in Zaire, where Katangan exiles invaded Shaba province and briefly took over the city of Kolwezi, had increased anxiety among some of Rhodesia's whites.

"But on the other hand, there is now a belief that the free world will be shaken to their senses and will adopt a more realistic attitude towards this great problem of Communist encroachment in this continent."

QUEEN CAUGHT OFF BALANCE

BREMERHAVEN, West Germany (Reuter) — Queen Elizabeth was forced to break into an un-majestic trot to keep her balance as she left from the yacht Britannia here Thursday.

The Queen, on the fourth day of her state visit to West Germany, seemed to have trouble finding her "land legs" when she arrived here after 30 hours aboard the yacht.

She appeared to find the incline of the gang-plank too steep and was forced to break into the trot. Prince Philip, several yards behind, was unable to support her.

Soviet diplomats and military representatives boycotted a reception and parade in the Queen's honor in West Berlin on Wednesday, apparently because she was accompanied by West German officials, informed sources said Thursday.

The only Warsaw pact representative to accept the invitations was the Romanian consul general, the sources said.

Tire Firm Chemicals Retard Cancer Tumors

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Chemical compounds used in the tire industry have retarded some types of leukemia and tumors in laboratory animals, the National Cancer Institute (NCI) has informed Goodyear Tire Rubber Co.

Dr. Richard Waller, Goodyear vice-president of research, said Wednesday that the testing was preliminary and drawing any conclusions from the results would be premature.

"Our compounds have not yet been tested in humans and it is still too early to conclude whether they will reach the clinic stage," said Waller. "However, continuing evaluations are in process."

The compounds, referred to in the industry as oxidation catalysts, anti-oxidants and vulcanization accelerators, are used to protect rubber from deterioration or to speed and improve chemical reactions in the manufacture of natural or synthetic rubber products.

NCI discovered the anti-cancer qualities of the compounds in its international screening program for industrial chemicals. Under that program NCI scientists collect chemical substances from industries and research organizations and test them.

106 in Court Over Trident

SEATTLE (AP) — Pleas of not guilty were entered Thursday for 106 persons arrested earlier this week during protests at the Trident nuclear submarine base at Bangor, on the Olympic Peninsula.

Some of the group attempted to enter pleas of "the truth," but since it had no legal standing, the innocent pleas were entered for them by Magistrate John L. Weinberg.

U.S. District Court trial dates of July 17 and July 24 were set for the defendants. All those arraigned have been released on personal recognizance bonds.

The group had been arraigned Tuesday night in Tacoma after the mass arrests, but had to make a second appearance because the paper work was not completed Tuesday.

Weinberg entered innocent pleas Tuesday for 157 other demonstrators who were taken directly to Seattle from the base.

Save Homes Bid Snuffed In Tie Vote

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Victoria council split right down the middle Thursday night before deciding not to take any action on two old Bellville St. houses now facing demolition.

The houses at 321 and 327 Bellville, which are seen by some aldermen as symbols of the city's progressive heritage program, could be torn down at any time.

Council members who chose not to stand in the way of a developer — who wants the houses out of the way so he can build a hotel — say Bellville St. is not the place to fight a battle over untested heritage laws.

Aldermen John Hayes, Murray Glazier, Robin Blencoe and Bill McElroy unsuccesfully argued that the house at 327 — which is on a city list of 32 commercial buildings awaiting designation — should immediately be named a heritage site.

Opposed to that move were Aldermen Bob Wright, Bill Tindall, Larry Ryan and Mayor Mike Young.

Hayes' motion for designation (which would have halted the developer from demolishing the most valuable of the two houses, but which might have also precipitated a million dollar lawsuit) was defeated by a tie vote. A majority was needed for the motion to pass.

At the heart of the debate was the question of whether or not the city should take a chance on standing up for the houses, knowing that if the matter goes to court the main line of defence would be new provincial government heritage legislation that has been roundly criticised as badly drafted.

In a brief but emotional speech Hayes said: "If we don't retain these two properties we may as well let our whole heritage program go to hell."

He argued that Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf had made repeated public statements standing by his Heritage Conservation Act.

"The minister feels his legislation does hold water and I feel that if we are pursued by the developer the minister will come through," said Hayes.

He added that Victoria did not establish what is probably the most comprehensive heritage program in North America by backing down whenever there was a possible lawsuit in the wind.

"We must do everything we can to save these houses," argued Hayes in pleading with other members of council for their support.

Wright, however, said the city would be irresponsible to take a position which could force it into court.

"I believe the minister would be happy if we had to stand up in court and fight," said Wright.

The legislation has never been tested in the courts.

He said he is a strong supporter of the heritage program and didn't want to see the Belleville houses fall, "but this is not the place to do battle."

"If ever there was a group of buildings we were going to dig in our heels and fight for these are certainly two," McElroy said.

McElroy said aldermen had to weigh the risk of a possible lawsuit against what the people of Victoria wanted and he believed they wanted the two old houses protected.

Blencoe supported McElroy, adding that "If he (Bawlf) says this legislation is going to stand up . . . then I'm going to support him, and if it turns out he's wrong then he'll have to make some retroactive legislation pretty quick."

Tindall reminded council, though, that if Bawlf's legislation didn't hold up in court and the city got hit with a million dollar bill, then the aldermen would be answerable.

"If it doesn't work out we have to face the people," he said.

The main problem with Bawlf's legislation is a clause that states council may grant compensation to the owner of a building given heritage designation and that that compensation shall be deemed fair.

But nothing is said about compensation to a tenant. And in the Bellville situation the developer is not the owner.

E.J. Butler, of Bellville Developments Ltd., has leased the property for a period of 75 years from International Travel Inns. Ltd. He has made it known he either wants the houses at 321 and 327 torn down or moved, to make room for a hotel.

Glazier told council it would be a shame if the buildings were either demolished or relocated because the Belville block is one of the first things visitors entering the city from the Inner Harbor see.

The block is immediately across the street from the docks used by the Princess Marguerite and the Black Ball ferry.

GARDENING

Flowers the Nose Knows

Flowers with perfume occur more freely among the annual bedding kinds than among perennial plants, giving all gardeners a chance to add this most desirable asset this weekend. Just scout around the garden centres and nurseries for started plants and get them into your garden without delay.

A couple of dozen plants from the ones mentioned here will perhaps make the garden for the whole season, for annuals have the gift of lasting long in bloom even though the plants live only from spring to fall. New ones must be put in next spring.

Border carnations are most fragrant; flowering continues well into September if old blossoms are cut off promptly. Nearly everyone likes the bracing clove scent; the colors are the familiar pink, white and dark red. Occasionally a plant or two lasts through the winter to bloom again.

Sweet peas are among the most perfumed annuals. You may still find them as started small plants in separate containers.

Provide some kind of light but firmly set wooden support with either netting or string for climbing. The leaf tendrils must have thin material to twine around. Have this in place before setting the sweet pea plants at the base.

If possible, choose a spot that faces east and yet is open to light. Sweet peas really like warmth without hot sun, lasting all summer with continuous blooming if never allowed to form pods.

Imagine a screen of scented sweet peas for a patio or on a balcony or sundeck. The plant will grow with good soil in deep tubs or planters — not the small six-inch depth which become overheated early in the morning and dry out twice daily when fully exposed to sun and wind.

Petunias are fragrant and have been discussed in an earlier column. And so were Ten-week-Stocks. These fully double flowers are among the longest lasting, for being double they have no urge to hurry into seed making. The fragrance is strong, carrying well on the evening air, noticeable also during the rare warm nights later in summer.

These too are lovely for colors and fragrance on patios, sundecks and balconies.

Mignonette was an old favorite but it must be sown early outdoors where it is to bloom. A few seeds could still be tried in the soil of a raised bed or in a planter.

Don't let the soil dry out, but it must not be too damp on top or the seedlings will "damp off." This can be prevented by topping the damp soil with a very thin layer of fine dry sand over the seed. No further watering should be needed until the tiny seedlings are established.

Fragrance is expected in gardens. Sometimes it is found in newly turned damp soil; at others it is the scent of freshly mown grass. These scents are deeply satisfying to the gardener who lives in and for the garden; but transient visitors are likely to be more impressed with the fragrance from a bed of colorful summer annuals.

LAND
As a sometime resident of Victoria and vicinity for the past 35 years I've seen remarkable changes in property values. Buildings have had their ups and downs, mostly ups, but land, and particularly well-chosen land, has proven to be an amazingly stable and rewarding commodity. In this most favoured and pleasing part of the world, good land is almost certain to be one of the wisest investments one can make. Alaska Pipeline in Limbo As U.S. Delays Approval

By Marjorie Nichols
Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — U.S. approval of the proposal to prebuild the southern legs of the Alaskan natural gas pipeline has been delayed pending clarification of legal problems that could jeopardize the private financing of the entire project.

In an unexpected development here Wednesday, the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) postponed its decision on the application of Pan-Alberta Gas to export more than a million cubic feet of gas a day to the U.S. American approval of the export proposal is integral to the plan to prebuild the southern legs of the Alaska line, one running from the British Columbia border to California and the second from Saskatchewan to Chicago.

Northwest Alaskan Pipeline, the company that has been given a congressional mandate to build the U.S. portion of the pipeline, two months ago signed a contract with Pan-Alberta for the purchase of 1.04 million cubic feet of Alberta gas per day. Of this, 240,000 cubic feet would be funnelled into the California line and the remaining 800,000 cubic feet would be assigned to the Chicago market.

Approval for the export proposal by regulatory agencies in Canada and the U.S. would provide Northwest with the feed stock and financing necessary to prebuild the southern end of the line.

Ironically, it had been anticipated that it would be the Canadian federal government that might veto the export proposal. Ottawa has indicated that it would look favorably upon a proposal for a gas swap — Alberta gas exported now would be replaced later by Alaskan gas when the pipeline is completed — but the contract between Northwest and Pan-Alberta contains no mention of a swap. It would be a straight sale.

U.S. approval for the application to begin pumping more Canadian gas into the energy-parched American west and midwest had been expected to be automatic. The problem is, however, that the pipeline project in the U.S. is still in a bureaucratic limbo.

At Wednesday's hearing, members of the regulatory commission sought to clarify the pipeline's legal status before granting approval for the prebuilding plan.

The enabling legislation passed by the U.S. Congress last November, provides that the natural gas line should be required to provide "equal access" to all potential users.

The legislation does not specifically state that the Alaska line should be designated a "common carrier," but the regulatory commission wants to seek clarification on the point before even granting the permit to import the Alberta gas.

Should legal advisers determine that the Alaska line would indeed be a common carrier, the builders would face enormous economic obstables.

For example, if after the completion of the Alaska line there was a huge new gas discovery in the north, the developers of the subsequent line could hook into the Alcan line and pay only the routine carrying charges.

In short, Northwest Alaskan and its partners will have a difficult, if not impossible, task attempting to raise the private capital necessary to build the pipeline if it is assigned a common carrier status.

OIL PIPELINE NEXT SCHEME?

CALGARY (CP) — Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd. has proposed two alternative routes, one involving a major oil port at Skagway in Alaska, to move oil from the Alaskan North Slope to markets in the United States.

The company, already tabbed to build a pipeline to move Alaskan natural gas across Canada to the U.S., says applications will be filed to construct the oil project if further studies bear out initial conclusions that it is both technically and economically feasible.

In a brief to the National Energy Board the company outlined two possible routes:

—A 1,505-mile line branching off from the trans-Alaskan pipeline at Delta Junction, just south of Fairbanks, Alaska, and parallelling its yet to be built Alaskan Highway natural gas line most of the way to Edmonton. Cost of the proposal is estimated at $1.6 billion.

—Moving oil from the existing oil port of Valdez along the Alaskan south coast by tanker to Skagway. A 1,091-mile pipeline from there, also following the gas line where possible, would move the oil to Edmonton. Cost of the project is estimated at $1 billion.

SUNSHINE AND MUSIC make a pleasant lunch break as office workers and shoppers relax in Centennial Square at noon Thursday and listen to the Oak Bay Senior Secondary tour band. Concerts by various bands will be heard on an occasional basis during the warm months. (John McKay Photo).

Vietnam 'Expells' Chinese

Times News Services

PEKING — China renewed its attack on Vietnam today over what it calls Hanoi's large-scale persecution and eviction of Chinese residents.

The Peking government has said more than 70,000 Chinese have been expelled and has spoken of mass arrests and even killings in Ho Chi Minh City and other places.

The Hsinhua news agency today carried a report from its correspondent Ma Li, who said he visited the frontier area in mid-May and was "confronted with the tragic sight of Vietnamese army and police personnel pursuing and beating their victims."

Ma said he looked across the Peilun border river into Mong Cai district of Vietnam's Quang Ninh province.

"There I saw on a stretch of open river flats, groups of victimized Chinese huddling together with their children, mothers trying to soothe their crying babies, old people sitting on bare ground, completely exhausted. Some were boarding small boats destined for the north bank.

"Some of the victimized Chinese were wading across at shallower points," he said. "Some of the victims were chased and beaten by the Vietnamese soldiers and security personnel and robbed of their belongings."

The Vietnamese ambassador in Peking, Nguyen Trong Vinh, denied Thursday night that Chinese in Vietnam were being maltreated.

He told Reuters news agency at a reception that a Chinese statement issued Wednesday night about the situation was not in keeping with the truth. He said some Chinese were leaving Vietnam, but the truth might take 10 or 15 years to come out.

The Washington Post, meanwhile, reportsd that China has reinforced troops along its border with Vietnam as part of an escalating feud with the Hanoi government.

In a report from Hong Kong quoting diplomatic sources, the Post said the Chinese also informed the Vietnamese Embassy in Peking earlier this month that it was cancelling all of its aid projects in Vietnam.

The newspaper said some sources reported that the Chinese have reinforced their troops on the Vietnamese border within the last few months apparently in response to an exodus of Chinese residents from Vietnam and "a spate of incidents involving Vietnamese forces on the other side."

BAREFOOT GUNMAN FIRES ON COMMUTERS

NEW YORK (AP) — A shoeless gunman opened fire in a bus terminal jammed with thousands of commuters today, killing a policeman and wounding two other persons before being shot to death, police said.

"People started to scream and hit the deck," said Richard Rowe, who was buying bus tickets in the Port Authority Bus Terminal just off Times Square in mid-Manhattan when he heard the shots.

Rowe, manager of employee relations for the Port Authority, said he saw the man, gun in hand, moving toward the ticket counter. He said the gunman shot a woman in the face and then shot a man.

Capt. John Boland, chief of detectives for the agency, said a Port Authority policeman apparently had confronted the gunman outside the terminal. Boland said the gunman wrestled the gun from the officer and charged into the building.

Rowe said the policeman tried to disarm the gunman, but that the gunman pointed the gun in the officer's face, shooting him two or three times. He said the gunman "attempted to pistol whip the cop when he was down."

Official reports said another policeman pulled his revolver and killed the gunman.

A .38-calibre revolver lay beside his body and blood was splattered across the floor of the main floor as thousands of curious commuters gathered around.

The wounded woman was in serious condition in hospital, officials said. The man was in satisfactory condition with gun wounds to the arm and leg.

Leaning Tower Occupied

PISA, Italy (AP) — Two hundred unemployed Italians occupying the Leaning Tower of Pisa today barred tourists from the famed landmark for the second day and vowed to continue their anti-government protest indefinitely.

"At this time of year an average of 2,000 tourists visit the tower daily, each paying 1,000 lire ($1.10) admission," a city official said. "We are losing thousands of dollars every day."

The protesters, who worked at a local ceramics factory until it closed 2½ years ago, drove to Pisa's Square of the Miracles on Thursday morning. They stepped in front of visitors waiting in line for the tower to open and pushed aside custodians.

Other protesters paraded in the square holding posters and stopping tourists.

The protesters say the government promised credits to their employer to build a modern ceramics factory when the old one closed, but that the company stopped work at the new site in December, saying the credits had been halted. The workers' compensation from a national unemployment fund was discontinued six months ago.

Oil States May Scrap U.S. Dollar

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Premier Jamshid Amouzegar says the world's major oil-producing countries may be forced to find a substitute for the U.S. dollar to pay for oil if the value of the U.S. currency continues to decline.

Unless the United States takes steps to reduce its budget deficit, he said, "the dollar is not going to recover and oil producers might have to peg oil prices to the World Bank's standard drawing rights," a kind of composite world currency created by the International Monetary Fund.

Cherry Trees Dropping Fruit

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Experts are mystified by a problem with the Yakima Valley cherry crop that could reduce the usual $15 million crop by as much as 25 per cent.

The fruit is dropping off the trees and horticulturists are at a loss to explain the problem.

Dr. Ron Tukey, Washington State University extension horticulturist, said Wednesday night following a tour of the valley that it doesn't appear to be a problem with pollination, chemical sprays or growth regulators.

Tukey also has ruled out the 1977 drought as a cause because the fruit also is dropping in areas which were never short of water.

Tukey said one possibility is that something happened to the trees last summer, probably after fruit harvest, and high summer heat might have had some effect.

Rally Slated On Plan For Marina

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

Council in January referred the proposal to the committee for further study after nearly 1,500 residents signed a petition against it.

Development of the area around North Saanich Marina, formerly Bosuns Marina, would entail the destruction of the last remaining major wintering and feeding area of migrating waterfowl on the northern peninsula, according to federal and provincial wildlife officials and environmental biologists.

The proposal, submitted by Bob Wright, president of Oak Bay Marina, which bought the Bosuns Marina and adjacent property last year, calls for development of the marina foreshore lot around Whales Point, plus dredging and development of a marina extension in Blue Heron Bay.

Wright's plan also calls for multiple residential housing on 15 acres to the south with a maximum of eight units per acre.

Wright is prepared to deed to North Saanich municipality a strip of waterfront 3,000 feet long and 200 feet wide to protect the wildlife habitat.

But residents say the greenbelt area would be useless as the mudflats in front of it would be dredged, thus destroying the birds' wintering habitat.

They also claim homes at the back of the greenbelt would interfere with the wildlife refuge.

There are other options. One of these is for the municipality to expropriate 22 of the 37 acres and to retain it as a park and wildlife refuge.

The petitioners favor this proposal although Wright says he believes this would be a burden on the taxpayers.

Mayor George Westwood says the park proposal is being explored.

"This is a sensitive ecological area," he said.

"The marina proposal would be smack in the centre of a bird sanctuary established in 1931 by the federal government."

Westwood said what concerns him is the lack of teeth in the Wildlife Act to protect bird sanctuaries.

"The act makes grandiose statements about protecting the habitat of wildlife but when you get right down to it you find that people can do almost what they want with the land."

He said the area under discussion is an important feeding area for thousands of birds.

"All these inlets with mudflats once supported migratory birds but little by little their habitat was whittled away by commercial marinas," he said.

One in 20 Carries Lethal Gene

One out of every 20 persons carries the cystic fibrosis gene but few of them know it until it is too late.

As Wendy Underhill, who with husband Gerry helped get the cystic fibrosis clinic established at the Memorial Pavilion about a year ago, says, "There's no way of finding out until you have a child."

By then it is too late and the child is saddled with a disease for which there is still no cure.

Looking at Paul, the Underhill's eight-year-old son, and other children at the clinic it's difficult for a layman to distinguish them from any other children.

The clinic's physician, Dr. Margaret Brown, explains that it was only in 1939 that cystic fibrosis was finally identified although it had been in existence for a long time.

A genetic disease that affects the lungs and digestive system, cystic fibrosis in the old days often resulted in children dying of lung disease or malnutrition.

Mrs. Underhill, a trained nurse, warns mothers to check with their doctor if their young child displays any of the symptoms of CF. These could be a constant cough producing thick mucus, an excessive appetite but loss of weight, frequent large, foul-smelling bowel movements, an excessive salty taste to the skin, repeated or prolonged bouts of pneumonia.

Because the symptoms are often mistaken many CF children go untreated but Brown reports there are 157 known cases in British Columbia and roughly 400 in Ontario.

Two-year-old Wesley Daniels plays happily with one-year-old Rodney Chapman at clinic

Up until the mid-60s, parents of CF children in British Columbia had to cope with heavy bills for medication. Now the medication is bought in bulk by the provincial pharmacy and dispensed free.

But parents must still keep an eagle eye for signs of problems. "They are very involved in taking good care of their children," Mrs. Underhill says.

This is Cystic Fibrosis Month. Mrs. Underhill and the other mothers of children attending the clinic are hoping others will join the Victoria Chapter of the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and help them get their message across.

They're also hoping for donations toward research. The address if P.O. Box 2.

One day, they hope, scientists will find what causes CF. Some believe a CF child's system lacks a single key chemical but nobody knows for sure.

Pandora Will Make First Arctic Trip

First ocean sciences research ship to head for the Western Arctic this year will be MV Pandora II — minus her Pisces submersible.

She will sail from Patricia Bay about July 4.

The ship will be in service largely on behalf of the Canadian Hydrographic Service, but will also carry out some magnetic surveys for the department of energy, mines and resources, said field hydrographer Mike Bolton.

The Pandora, built to withstand Arctic ice conditions, will operate in Amundsen Gulf and the Beaufort Sea, both areas of offshore oil exploration.

The Pisces IV submersible for which Pandora is a self-sufficient tender and maintenance shop, will remain at Patricia Bay and will be available for testing new equipment.

The CHS will be carrying out a reduced program of hydrographic surveying in line with federal spending policy for in-house scientific work. This has resulted in laying up two ships in the past two seasons — CSS William J. Stewart and CFAV Laymore.

Meanwhile, Pacific coastal hydrographic surveying will be done by CSS Parizeau starting in early July offshore from the Queen Charlotte Islands, and by the CSS Richardson which has an assignment in the Sandspit area among other survey duties.

Most hydrographic surveys will be done by echo sounder providing detailed data for preparation of navigation charts.

Funding Doubles

Private research and development funding for ocean sciences on the Pacific coast has more than doubled to almost $1.9 million in the last three years of the federal government's contracting out policy.

Industrial liaison officer Bob Smith, of the Institute of Ocean Sciences, said the total represents the value of contracts given to private individuals and companies with expertise in ocean sciences, hydrography and electronics to the end of the 1977-78 fiscal year.

Cuba Trained Rebels, Says Carter

WASHINGTON — President Carter accused Cuba Thursday of training and equipping the Katangan rebels who invaded Zaire and said Cuba must share responsibility for the bloody attack.

Carter's charges, the harshest and most explicit that his administration has directed against Cuba, were made at a news conference in Chicago.

His accusations, made in an opening statement, ran counter to assertions by the government of President Fidel Castro that Cuba played no role in training, equipping or cooperating with the Katangan invasion forces.

Informed sources said the president's statement was based on intelligence received by the administration within the last couple of days. The sources added that Carter's decision to speak out bluntly about the Cuban role in the Katanga conflict was made Thursday morning, just before the start of his two-day political trip.

At the news conference, Carter bore down heavily on Soviet and Cuban military involvement in African conflicts and the question of whether the United Staes is able to play any countering role.

He rejected suggestions that Washington should link a new strategic arms limitation talks agreement with the Soviet Union to demands for Soviet restraint in Africa. But he warned that continued aggressive Soviet behavior on that continent would make it difficult to win approval for a SALT agreement from the American people and Congress.

Meanwhile, President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire has extended his stay in Paris to hire mercenaries to replace the departing French Foreign Legion paratroopers in the rebellion-torn Shaba province of Zaire, French press reports said today.

The Zaire embassy could not be reached for comment.

BROKEN DATE SUIT

SAN FRANCISCO — A 30-year-old accountant has filed a $38 lawsuit against a woman who stood him up on a San Francisco date.

Tom Horsley, who said he will not take being stood up lying down, filed the suit in small claims court against Alyn Chesselet "as a matter of principle" because she broke an "oral contract" to have dinner with him and see the musical The Wiz earlier this year.

Ms. Chesselet, 30, a waitress at Vesuvio Cafe in San Francisco, said Horsley is "nuts" if he thinks she will pay.

But Horsley replied: "Most guys would be just as angry. I spent time, money and energy planning the date — and ended up going to the show alone.

"If I win in court, I'll feel I was right in principle."

Horsley, who lives near San Jose, wants to be paid for two hours of driving to and from San Francisco at his minimum rate of $8.50 an hour as a certified public accountant and 17 cents per 1.6 kilometres in car expenses for the 160-kilometre round trip. His claim is for $34 plus a $2 filing fee and $2 to serve court papers.

7 B.C. Airports Fail Fire-Fighting Rules

VANCOUVER (CP) — Seven airports in British Columbia do not meet fire suppression standards set by the Ministry of Transport.

Leading the list is Cranbrook, where the recent inquest into the Feb. 11 Pacific Western Airlines crash which claimed 43 lives focussed attention on the fire suppression services available at similar airports around B.C.

The six other airports which do not meet minimum MoT standards are Campbell River, Penticton, Terrace, Castlegar, Dawson Creek and Quesnel.

An MoT spokesman said Thursday that much of the problem can be traced to delays of up to five years in obtaining sophisticated foam firetrucks capable of battling large blazes which generally accompany a major airplane crash.

"Trucks we ordered five years ago have yet to be delivered," the spokesman said. "There was a design problem with the big 60,000-pound foam trucks — they kept blowing their brake-drums and there were problems with the suspension and the drive chain."

One B.C. airport now is using a 28-year-old foam truck as the fire chief awaits delivery of a new truck.

The coroner's jury at the Cranbrook inquest heard testimony from airport fire chief George Grimstad that he regarded fire protection at his airport totally inadequate to deal with a major crash. He was a one-man fire department at an airport that required 11 full-time firemen, according to MoT rules.

Grimstad had only a small dry chemical truck, which he said was next to useless in battling a major fire such as the 737 blaze, when 26,000 pounds of volatile aviation fuel spilled from the ruptured tanks of the Boeing 737.

It took firemen 70 minutes to get their equipment in to battle the blaze, in the snow 500 yards off the end of the runway. Grimstad said that in the intervening hour he fought the fire with handfuls of snow.

Instrument Flight Rules and Visual Flight Rules regulations define Cranbrook as a Class D airport because it handles in excess of 150 aircraft movements a month of planes weighing 60,000 pounds or more. The rules say Class D airports must have three firefighters on duty at any time, plus one response truck and a foam truck.

Cranbrook's hours of operations run through two shifts and weekends as well, requiring a minimum of 11 firemen, but Grimstad is the only one the airport has. The airport got a foam truck a year after the MoT promised it would arrive and three months after the PWA crash.

Wayne d'Easum, city administrator for Dawson Creek, said in an interview that the airport has no firemen, no part-time firemen, no trucks and just one jeep.

"Once it gets there, we have two fire extinguishers, an axe and maybe two pairs of boots," d'Easum said. "We have two jets a day in and out of the airport and we need better than this."

Neale To Coach Canucks

VANCOUVER (CP) — Harry Neale, who had a winning record in six World Hockey Association seasons, today was named coach of Vancouver Canucks, notorious losers in the National Hockey League.

Neale, 41, signed a three-year agreement with the NHL team after securing his release from New England Whalers of the WHA. Neale had one year remaining on his WHA contract.

He becomes the sixth Vancouver coach as the Canucks prepare for their ninth season in the NHL. Orland Kurtenbach was fired as coach by general manager Jake Milford last month after Vancouver missed the Smythe Division playoffs for the second straight year.

"We've been watching Harry Neale for months and we've had good reports on him," Milford said. "He runs a tight ship and has a winning record."

Tories Charge Cabinet Letter Cover-Up

OTTAWA (CP) — The government refused today to make public a letter in which a former national revenue minister said he believed the RCMP was acting illegally in using confidential tax information for criminal investigations.

The letter was referred to briefly Thursday by John Sopinka, counsel to a royal commission on RCMP wrongdoing, as government lawyers fought to keep the commission from making it public.

"Why cover up if you have nothing to cover up?" former prime minister John Diefenbaker said in the Commons as Government House Leader Allan MacEachen resisted opposition efforts to have the government table the letter.

MacEachen said that tabling the letter would interfere with the work of the royal commission.

But Conservative Leader Joe Clark said the government is using the royal commission as a cover-up.

MacEachen said government lawyers assured cabinet that the secret 1972 agreement—it gave Mounties access to confidential tax information— is legal. Its legality has been questioned by Sopinka at commission hearings this week. Outside the House, MacEachen said he was not sure, but that he thought government law officers gave the ruling when the agreement legal was made in 1972.

Sopinka didn't name the author. But the only reference this week before the royal commission to cabinet correspondence came Wednesday as he tried to question a witness about a May 10, 1976, letter from Bud Cullen, then revenue minister, to Warren Allmand, then solicitor-general.

That letter was written as Alberta Attorney-General Jim Foster ordered a royal commission inquiry into the handling of a police investigation, involving the RCMP and the revenue department, into corruption and other offences connected with a midway-show operation that had been raided by police in 1975 in Edmonton.

The Alberta inquiry later turned up evidence of a secret 1972 agreement under which the RCMP had been given access to confidential tax files of figures involved in organized crime. The inquiry has been told by tax officials that investigators went beyond the terms of the agreement, whose legality itself has been questioned in sessions of the federal royal commission here.

Clark asked MacEachen

Another Deficit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States registered a $2.86 billion foreign trade deficit in April, the government reported today. It was the 23rd consecutive month in which the country imported more goods than it exported.

NEW YORK (AP) — Several of the largest U.S. banks today raised their prime interest rates to the highest level in more than three years.

Suffocate Arms Race - Trudeau

NEW YORK (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said today the world must try to halt development of nuclear weapons—such as the so-called neutron bomb—in the laboratory.

He told the special United Nations session on disarmament that President Carter was farsighted in his decision to postpone production of the controversial neutron bomb.

"We must all hope that the response of the Soviet Union will be such as to make it possible to extend that postponement indefinitely."

Trudeau, making his first UN speech as prime minister, outlined steps which he said could halt the nuclear arms race and control the conventional arms trade.

This would dampen the "escalating balance of terror" which is consuming almost $400 billion a year in arms expenditures, the prime minister said.

Trudeau said the world must try to suffocate the nuclear arms race.

"The ultimate intent of a strategy of suffocation is to halt the arms race in the laboratory," the prime minister said.

"But an offer to halt the arms race at any stage is a step in the direction of genuine disarmament.

"The president of the United States has shown the way in recent weeks with his farsighted postponement of a decision to produce a special battlefield nuclear weapon."

The prime minister was referring to Carter's recent decision to defer production of the neutron bomb, hoping the Soviet Union will make arms concessions.

Trudeau did not state whether Canada favors the U.S. producing and deploying the weapon if the Soviet response is not considered satisfactory.

The prime minister also suggested that regional groups, such as Latin American countries, might agree to control the build-up of conventional arms and reduce international tensions.

Trudeau said a decision by most Latin American countries and major world powers to declare Latin America a nuclear weapon-free zone is an example of what he means.

Trudeau carefully tied disarmament to national security. Disarmament makes sense only if nations feel secure. So it is useless to make grand declarations without being able to follow them up, he said.

Canada and other Western countries attending the special session have in the past rejected proposals of "instant disarmament" as impractical. The Western powers say that disarmament must be accomplished in stages.

HARNESS MEET OKd

Attorney-General Garde Gardom announced today a 57-day harness racing season at Sandown race track in Sidney.

Gardom said the season, which runs June 3-Sept. 9, will create about 200 full or part-time jobs and he predicted that 60 per cent of the horses racing in the first season will be Canadian owned.

Arson Cited In Blaze

Arson is suspected in Thursday's fire that caused $150,000 damage to offices in the Town and Country Shopping Centre.

A Saanich police said today firemen discovered signs fire had been set in three separate locations inside the gutted offices of a law firm headed by lawyer Gary Tindall.

Fire officials are still uncertain how the fires were was started and have found no evidence that a flammable liquid was used.

There is no evidence the offices were broken into. When firemen arrived they had to break down a locked door to get in.

The provincial fire marshal's office is investigating and results of lab tests on materials found at the scene are expected to be known later today.

REGINA (CP) — The $1 Western Express lottery, now drawn every two weeks, will become a once-a-week affair in September, Bill Clarke, chairman of the Western Canada Lottery Foundation, said Thursday.

HULL-TO-HULL boats wfll completely fill Inner Harbor by late evening as participants in Swiftsure and Jaun De Fuca races crowd in together in readiness for start of events tomorrow morning. Jabour Wins Round

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Supreme Court issued an order Thursday preventing the Law Society of B.C. from sentencing North Vancouver lawyer Donald Jabour for conduct unbecoming a member of the society.

A committee of the society convicted Jabour earlier this week and recommended that he be suspended from the society for six months.

Justice R. P. Anderson granted Jabour's request for a temporary injunction to delay sentencing until the court can rule on Jabour's claim that the federal Combines Investigation Act prevents the society from banning advertising.

Jabour's lawyer, Bryan Williams, said the trial would likely take place in November.

Jabour has agreed not to advertise his legal clinic before the trial starts.

Justice Anderson said that all B.C. lawyers are still barred from advertising—at least until the trial is finished.

In the legislature Thursday, he introduced an amendment to the Legal Profession Act that would prevent the Law Society from making rules governing advertising by lawyers.

Before he was elected to the legislature in March, he was censured by the Law Society for advertising his store-front law offices in Vancouver.

TALL SHIPS SHRINK

The number of tall ships definitely coming to Victoria in July has fallen to two and it looks as if they will not be racing against each other, Captain Cook Bicentennial Committee chairman Ed Sweeney said today.

The only two tall ships confirmed are the Osprey from Japan and the Eagle from the U.S.

Sweeney said the Osprey may step down a class and race from Hawaii against three class B vessels, the Oriole, the Lady Frei of San Francisco and possibly the Safari, also from the U.S.

Sweeney said the committee hopes to get a third tall ship, the Yankee Clipper, to make an appearance here in mid-July.

Sweeney said the emphasis now would be on the idea of a visit rather than a race.

CUPW Can be Sued

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec Court of Appeal upheld Thursday the principle that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) may be held responsible for damages caused to third parties during an illegal postal strike.

The three-judge panel of the court confirmed a 1975 ruling by a Quebec provincial court judge in Sherbrooke awarding $1,000 to Santana Inc., a shoe manufacturing company, against the CUPW.

Mr. Justice Rodolphe Pare, who wrote the principal notes to the judgment, wholly rejected the union's contention that its sole obligation was to furnish service to the Treasury Board and that it had no responsibility to any third party, in this case the shoe manufacturing firm.

In its claim, Santana said its business volume dropped to $85,520 in April, 1974, from $185,765 the month earlier because of lost orders caused by an illegal 16-day work stoppage in April by the postal workers.

The justices said the strike was in violation of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and constituted an offence punishable by summary conviction as well as a civil wrong under the Quebec Civil Code.

As a result, Mr. Justice Pare said, the government and citizens have equal recourse against the CUPW for any direct damages resulting from illegal suspension of postal service.

Vancouver Drivers Raked

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police say that Vancouver motorists are developing the Big City Syndrome — bad manners, recklessness and contempt for those who prefer two feet to four wheels.

Officials add that what once was known as the city with the most courteous motorists in North America is fast becoming just another place to burn rubber and beat the other guy through the traffic light.

"I've been a traffic cop here for 31 years and I can see a big change for the worse in our traffic manners," says Corporal Don Brown, Vancouver City Police special events co-ordinator.

"We are losing our leisurely pace," he says. "We should try to preserve it before it disappears altogether."

Because of motorists' deteriorating driving habits, police are starting a traffic-awareness program for pedestrians of all ages — particularly the elderly.

Starting in the fall when the evenings start getting darker, police will launch a Step Lightly program for seniors, says McLarty. "Last year 15 persons aged 60 and over were killed by cars."

One reason for the high traffic fatality rate among the elderly is the dark clothing they wear, he says.

To combat this, police will give talks and "we will issue them with clear plastic sparkle tags to wear on a cord around their necks if they go out at night," Brown says.

The $5,000 cost of the tags will be met in part by the Police Foundation.

UVic's Rhodos A Labor of Love

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

A gardener would need patience and plenty of time and money to attempt cultivating the rarer types of rhododendrons found in the University of Victoria gardens.

Some of them don't even blossom until they're 30 years old and most have been raised from seeds carefully collected from such exotic places as Burma and Tibet.

"It's a labor of love," says UVic grounds superintendent Rex Murfitt.

Murfitt now watches over nearly 200 species of rhododendrons in a priceless collection of more than 350 plants, many bequeathed or donated to the university by ardent horticulturalists.

The University Gardens, located on both sides of the Henderson Road entrance to UVic, has the finest rhododendron collection of Vancouver Island, Murfitt says without hesitation.

But while ready to praise the magnificent local specimens, he's quick to acknowlege the true pioneers in the art of rhododentron cultivation.

Europeans, particularly the British have a passion for collecting the magnificent shrubs, and have been doing it many years longer than their North American coun-terparts.

"They'd go out for a year or two and come staggering back with all these seeds from rhododendrons."

Gradually, the art of rhododendron cultivation spread to North America and has taken hold particularly on the West Coast where the rainy,humid conditions are ideal.

Mrs. Simpson, who died in 1973, started her collection in the 1920's from seeds obtained on journeys to China.

Murfitt believes that two species in her collection are so rare they are no longer cultivated and he plans to have them officially identified by a botanist.

These and another valuable collection donated by Dr. Edmund Lohbrunner, of Victoria, form the basis of University Gardens.

The rarest two species in the collection are tree-like rhododendrons about 15 feet tall.

One is rhododendron decorum, collected as a seed in the Szecluen Province of China. Another is rhododendron leclerei, with a bluish flower, that was found 10,000 feet above sea level in the Yunnan Province of China.

This one is at least 40 years old and doing well in its new surroundings.

Murfitt is now going to take on the large task of labelling all plants in the two-acre garden for the benefit of visitors.

To him the most important thing is not the rarity of the collection, but its beauty, and the enjoyment it gives to people who will never have anything like it in their own back yards.

TOWN TALK

Among the graduates at UVic's Convocation Ceremonies Saturday will be Eric Scoates, who'll pick up a Bachelor of Arts in history.

What makes Scoates interesting is the fact he's a grandfather who'll be 71 June 18.

About 12 members of his family, including his wife Marion, will all be there but his grandchildren, who live in Vancouver, can't make it.

Scoates says he decided to go to university after he retired in 1972 from the Victoria School Board and found there just wasn't enough to do.

He says his biggest and most pleasant surprise was the reception he got from his fellow students.

"I fit in so well with the 20-year-olds," he says "They were very kind to me. We used to swap notes and borrow books from one another. I must say I never felt any generation gap."

Water mistake may be a bad pun but it's an admission by Town Talk of a boo-boo involving one of Canada's best-known water color artists so perhaps we can be forgiven.

That's a roundabout way to apologize for our incorrect identification of local artist Brian Travers-Smith as Bill in an article last week.

Travers-Smith, of 590 Transit, was one of four new members elected to the Canadian Society of Painters in Water Color during its annual meeting in Toronto this month.

A final note from the NDP convention last weekend at UVic: The militantly feminist Women's Caucus was smaller and had less influence than in previous years. But it still tried its best to plan strategy and get candidates it supported elected to key positions in the party.

That was why a number of women delegates who are not caucus members found a washroom unbelievably crowded at one point between ballots. When one finally wondered out loud why the line-up was so long, she was told: "Oh, this isn't a line-up. This is a caucus meeting."

An information officer's job is to provide information, right?

Seems Transport Canada has a new guy on the job.

Wrote us a chatty little note saying he has taken over as regional manager of public affairs for the department.

A lovely little note, it was, full of data about past experience, plans to help the media every which way and urging us not to hesitate and call if we need any right answers.

Whoever you are, Mr. Mystery, it was nice to hear from you.

Everything is now hunky-dory at the provincial museum.

The day after a story appeared in the Times outlining tourist beefs over the museum's early closing hours during peak visitor periods in the summer, Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy announced that as of June 1 and lasting through to Sept.30, the museum will stay open until 9 p.m.

Museum officials said they had had scads of beefs from angry tourists who turned up to visit the place only to find out that contrary to tourist brochures listing closing time as 8.30 p.m., the museum had shut up shop at 5.30 p.m.

Thetis Swimmers Losers As City Saves: Lifeguards

Former lifeguards at the city-owned Thetis Lake are being discriminated against because of a labor dispute, the president of Local 50 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees said today.

Jim Walker said the lifeguards, some of whom were on the B.C. team that won the national championships recently in Edmonton, are being forced to look elsewhere for work because of the hard line being taken by the city's parks department.

In 1977, on behalf of the lifeguards, the union lodged a grievance, saying the lifeguards should be paid as outside workers and about three weeks ago the Labor Relations Board made a ruling in favor of the grievance.

The board ruled, however, that the rate for lifeguards should be arbitrable and the city is still negotiating the rate that will be paid.

David Philip, 22, of 4528 Tiedemann Place, is one of the lifeguards affected. He spent one year, unpaid, as an apprentice at the lake and four as lifeguard. He, like the other former lifeguards, has his National Lifeguard Society certificate. In spite of numerous applications he cannot get a job at the lake this year.

Parks administrator Cliff Bate confirms that this year the city will advertise for lifeguards.

In the past years the Thetis Lake lifeguards have been employed not only as lfeguards, but as maintenance workers and fireguards in the Thetis Lake park.

Bate said this year they will be employed solely as lifeguards, which means when the weather is unfavorable, they will not be on the payroll.

Walker said this means that well-trained lifeguards will look elsewhere for work which has better continuity and agreed with Philip that this means people using Thetis Lake will not be as well protected.

He said the parks department's hard line was undoubtedly due to the fact the lifeguards had taken action to get paid the same amount as other outside workers.

"They (the city) hire paper pickers for Beacon Hill Park at the base rate of $6.94. It's ridiculous that people saving lives get less," he said, adding he had seen a girl cutting grass at Thetis Lake last summer who was also getting more than the lifeguards.

Later today the city posted an advertisement for a head lifeguard, offering a $5.90 rate. In addition to supervisory and lifeguard duties, the job also requires some custodial duties.

Walker said at a meeting about a week ago city manager Jim Bramley told union officials the city had no intention of employing the highest-paid lifeguards in the province.

Philip said protection at the lake is already suffering from the dispute. In past years a lifeguard or attendant was at Thetis Lake for the Victoria Days holiday weekend. This year, he said, there was no lifeguard and the emergency phone, normally there, had not been installed.

"We're concerned the park is going to be destroyed and people are not going to be as safe as they have been," Philip said. "In 1977 we had some 176 reportable first aid cases, 28 water rescues involving 32 people."

He said he had been told he and his fellow-workers were not being hired because of poor relations with other staff members but Walker said this was not the case, that if there were poor relations they were with management.

Walker said the union is asking that lifeguards receive the basic rate of $6.94 and that the head lifeguard receive the second rate of $7.20.

He said the city's latest offer will be considered at an executive meeting this evening.

DID KILLER SLAY TWO — OR THREE?

A Port Angeles police spokesman said today there is little doubt in his mind the murders of a woman in Victoria and a woman in the U.S. city were committed by the same individual.

Lieutenant Roy Morgan said a man similar to one described in the Victoria killing was seen in the Port Angeles area a few days before the body of 20-year-old Janet Bowcut was found strangled in her apartment bedroom April 24.

A composite drawing of a man wanted for questioning in connection with the Mother's Day murder in Victoria of 26-year-old Janice Aili Forbes is being circulated in the Port Angeles area.

Morgan said the two killings have several points in common.

Both victims were young mothers who lived alone with their small children in apartments. Both were killed sometime during the afternoon.

Both were found in the bedroom of their apartments, face down, their hands tied behind their backs and with a cord wound around their necks. The cords in each case had been gathered from the victim's own belongings, in Mrs. Forbes's case, from her bathrobe.

In neither case was the victim sexually assaulted, nor were there any signs of struggle. The killer had also arranged linen in an identical, bizarre manner but police are withholding details.

Mrs. Forbes's two children, aged 5 and 9, were outside playing at the time she was murdered.

Miss Bowcut had a six-month-child who was found in the middle of her bed crying when police finally broke into the room around 6 p.m. The killer had placed pillows around the bed to make sure the baby didn't fall.

Police are also looking into the possibility the murders may be linked to the killing of a young woman in San Diego in March.

Morgan said the body of a woman was found in a ravine. She had been strangled and bound with wire in similar fashion to the other two.

On Wednesday Victoria police Insp. Angus Stewart released a composite drawing of a man seen in the area of Mrs. Forbes's apartment the afternoon of the murder. The man is described as black, about five feet four inches tall, with short curly black hair, and a pock-marked complexion. He was wearing a knee-length shiny black leather or vinyl coat and wore a cap.

Morgan said several persons reported seeing a man of similar description in Port Angeles five to six days before Miss Bowcut was killed.

MAGGIE SCUTTLED?

The Princess Marguerite will be kicked off the Seattle run by U.S. pollution regulations in the next year or two and the NDP says she should be upgraded rather than scrapped.

The vessel, owned by the government through the B.C. Steamships Corp., needs about $350,000 worth of work to bring her up to environment standards required by a new U.S. law which takes effect in January, 1980.

Travel Minister Grace McCarthy agrees the ship is aging and will have to be replaced but won't say what vessel will take over the four-hour run to Seattle.

Charles Barber (NDP—Victoria) says tourists fall in love with the old-fashioned charm of the Marguerite and for this reason alone, she should be refitted and continued on the run.

People think it's a bit of Buckingham Palace, says the NDP MLA, while the Queen of Surrey on the other hand has no character.

The new U.S. law says all ships travelling in U.S. waters will have to install raw sewage holding tanks or sewage treatment systems by 1980.

McPherson Books in the Black

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

After one year under new management the McPherson Playhouse is doing very nicely, thank you.

For the first time in years the books are in the black, the theatre is being used as it never has been before and there are plans for an even more bustling future.

That was the theme of the first annual report presented Thursday by the McPherson Playhouse Foundation, the private group which took over the operation of the city-owned theatre April 1, 1977.

At a media reception foundation president Allan Purdy did some modest and justifiable trumpet-blowing as he gave a rundown of facts and figures on the year ending March 31.

When city council was first approached in 1976 and asked to turn over management of the theatre through a lease arrangement, it was told that the McPherson's deficit could be wiped out in the first year.

As it turned out, that was a conservative estimate.

Purdy reported Thursday that the foundation had been able to transform the theatre's 1976 deficit of $22,000 (under direct city of Victoria operation) into a 1977 operating surplus of more than $28,000.

Even after deducting $2,600 for building alterations and improvements and $11,000 in providing subsidized theatre rental and free services to various community organizations, the group still finished its first year with more than $14,000 net revenue.

Purdy noted this financial turnaround came in a year when the cross-Canada trend saw attendances at live theatre and music performances slump by 15 to 25 per cent.

It was achieved through finding several new potential uses for the theatre which in turn produced a substantial increase in gross attendance. Total attendance at the McPherson jumped more than 13,000 to 168,000 and that did not include 40,000 who attended the arts and crafts exhibitions held during the year.

There was a 60 per cent increase in activities, from 374 in 1976 to 601 last year.

In considering the elimination of the deficit, the improvements undertaken and the underwriting of community services, Purdy said, "an objective appraisal would have to conclude that in real values matched against the 1976 operation, our contribution has equalled an upswing of net receipts of not less than $50,000 to $60,000 or more, an incredible accomplishment in a recessive year."

His report said the foundation has participated, and will continue to participate, in the actual production of live stage entertainment and film presentations on a "shared risk" basis with various organizations.

"There is a risk factor and I am of the opinion that we should be prepared to take the occasional risk, providing that the potential loss is not extraordinary," he added.

Purdy stressed the popularity of the McPherson's free noon-time concerts and theatre shows, and said the management committee is now arranging a summer series of concerts.

Other events planned include a major arts seminar, a musical talent search, a school choirs festival, school bands competition and ethnic concerts.

Networks Battle For Big Bucks

NEW YORK (AP) — With the 1977-78 television season barely over, the networks' battle for the big bucks is on again, as ABC builds on its fortress at the top while CBS and NBC plan major assaults.

ABC was first to unveil its fall prime-time schedule, on May 1, and the changes were minimal. In contrast, CBS' fall lineup, announced the next day, and NBC's, made public Monday, bore little resemblance to last season.

It was that way because ABC was No. 1 in ratings 26 of the 30 weeks between Sept. 12 and April 9, CBS second by virtue of a good last half of the season, and NBC not even close.

Ratings transform themselves into advertising dollars. In 1976-77, for example, the last year for which the figures are available, ABC made $63 million more in profits than runnerup NBC, a situation attributed almost wholly to ABC's ratings supremacy.

Notably, the fall schedules at ABC and NBC were drafted without the physical presence of Fred Silverman, the man generally credited with engineering ABC's rise to the top.

Silverman announced in January he would leave ABC to become president and chief executive of NBC. As the fall schedules were drafted, Silverman was between jobs, still under contract to the network he had helped run since 1975. He'll join NBC in June.

Although Silverman wasn't in on NBC's planning physically, one of NBC's seven new entries this fall is the work of Garry Marshall, the man who produced for ABC the two top-rated shows of last season, Laverne and Shirley and Happy Days.

ABC said it would add only 3½ hours of new programming in the fall, compared with 6½ hours for CBS and seven for NBC.

What may be more significant, ABC cancelled only three shows from last season, while NBC lopped six from its lineup and CBS seven. Among the casualties were Kojak on CBS, and NBC's Police Woman.

On the other hand, there was plenty of reshuffling by all three networks. ABC gave new slots to five shows, and CBS and NBC four each.

ABC left alone the heart of its prime-time schedule—8-9:30 p.m. Tuesdays: Happy Days, Laverne and Shirley, Three's Company.

NBC kept its best, Little House on the Prairie, at 8 p.m. Mondays, and CBS left its Monday and Thursday evening lineups intact—M-A-S-H, One Day at a Time and Lou Grant on Mondays and The Waltons, Hawaii Five-O and Barnaby Jones on Thursdays.

The eight new series for the fall 1978-79 television season replace some golden oldies among the six shows that were cancelled — "Police Woman," "James at 15," "CPO Sharkey," "Chico and the Man," "Bionic Woman" and "Grizzly Adams."

The new shows include "The Waverly Wonders," a half hour sitcom with Joe Namath as a high school history-teacher basketball coach of a bunch of kids who sound like rejects from Kotter's classroom.

Other comedies include "Legs," another half-hour in which an entertainer tries to bring up her son among the absurdities of Las Vegas — "One Day at a Time Goes West?"

"Coastecoast" offers a pair of stewardii having antics in the sky, ala "Coffee, Tea or Me" or a flying "Love Boat."

SPECIAL IN THIS ISSUE: the first of four articles featuring plans for cottage building

PLAN Nº 8-1843 — 13.8 m. // 45 ft. / pi. 4 in. / po.

It's Building Time

This is the time of year when people's thoughts turn to building a summer cottage by the sea or lake, or in a quiet forested setting.

As a service to readers, Prevue presents in this issue and for the following three weeks, in its Home of the Week series, cottages which would be suitable for almost any areas. The plans for these cottages, as well as a book of many other exciting summer dwellings can be ordered in the same way as regular Home of the Week plans.

Here's an ideal design for the large family with a medium frontage lakefront property — four bedrooms and two bathrooms on two levels — with lots of elbow room for everyone.

The long rectangular living-dining room combination features a high beamed ceiling and a centrally-positioned wide stone fireplace with the built-in barbecue feature on the patio side. The fireplace is flanked by full-width windows which seem to bring the natural setting indoors.

The well-planned L-shaped kitchen-nook is designed to minimize household chores and is readily accessible to both the dining room and patio.

The furnace and hot water tank adjoin the downstairs bathroom for plumbing economy and facility of installation and maintenance.

One bedroom downstairs and three upstairs; all with excellent storage facilities and good exposure for view and natural lighting.

Both upstairs and downstairs baths have tubs and vanity sinks and abundant storage space for bed and bath linen. The upstairs unit could easily have a second vanity sink installed for greater convenience. The downstairs unit contains the washer in a convenient corner.

A large rear entrance foyer could be developed into additional storage closets for recreation and sports equipment.

Plans for design No. 8-1843 may be purchased either by single set, at a cost of $70 for the first set and $10 for each additional set, or by the package. A five-set plan package, including the first set, is economically priced at $100 and an eight-set package, also including the first set, is only $125.

Whichever method you choose, please include $4 for postage and handling. B.C. residents add 5 per cent sales tax.

Send for the current edition of Cottage Country, Series #37, featuring money-saving do-it-yourself ideas and informative articles on the Canadian cottaging scene, plus 16 full-colour pages of quality cottage plans for all seasons. Available for $1.75 ($1.25 plus 50 cents postage and handling).

To order any of these items please send cheque or money order payable to the Home of the Week. Address to: Home of the Week, c/o Victoria Press, 382 West Broadway, Vancouver, B.C. V5Y 1R2.

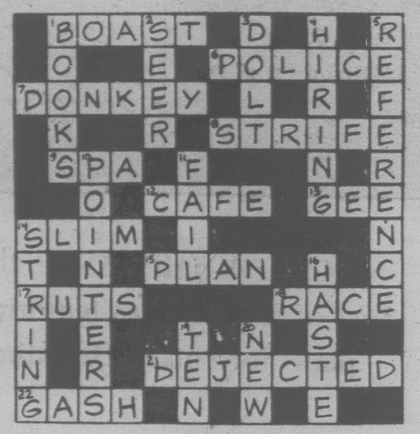
PAYOFF PUZZLE

Correct Answers to Last Week's Puzzle



CLUES ACROSS

6. POLICE not polite. Beyond mere ordinary politeness, POLICE assistance is reassuring (in its authoritativeness).
7. DONKEY not monkey. The clue assumes that this animal is a kept one; however, the vast majority of monkeys are wild.
8. STRIFE not strike. STRIFE in general is more the sort of thing to "put an end to" (i.e., simply stop somehow). A strike, ideally, should be brought to a satisfactory conclusion for all.
12. CAFE not safe. The idea of searching suits CAFE better. Anything in a safe should be easy enough to find.
14. SLIM not slip. It is often said of a girl that she is SLIM. Strictly speaking, it's not so much that the "word" slip in itself is applied to a girl, as that there is a phrase "slip of a girl" so used.
15. PLAN not play. To win as much as you can, is a reasonable aim or PLAN at the particular moment "when you turn" professional. It is subsequently, rather, that you do the playing.
17. RUTS not rats. The clue's mild phrasing suits RUTS, which may be found awkward, muddy, etc., rather than rats, which are almost universally detested.
18. RACE not face. Evolution applies more comprehensively than merely to the face.
21. DEJECTED not detected. DEJECTED is more immediately to the point. The clue calls for "convicted," say, rather than "detected."
22. GASH not grasp. A gasp would be too incidental to count as an "effect" or result.

CLUES DOWN

1. BOOKS not boots. The clue's inclusion of "intentionally" hints at the possibility of acquiring BOOKS/boots wrongfully by oversight — the sort of thing that happens with (borrowed) BOOKS rather than boots.
4. HIRING not firing or tiring. It's a question of overworking people, rather than tiring them as a distinct act. HIRING is more apt than firing, since disorganized management is liable to feel under-assisted rather than overstaffed.
10. POINTERS not painters. There are definite "things to look for" when judging POINTERS as dogs. In art, judgment of painters is more a matter of taste.
11. FAIL not fail. The clue reflects a probability of blame, which applies more suitably in the case of FAIL. A fall may well be just one of those things, without question of fault.
14. STRING not spring. The clue favors that which may well break for a visible reason (or possibly for "no visible reason"). STRING is often a bit thin or frayed, but you don't usually expect to tell by looking at it if a spring is likely to break.
16. HASTE not waste. Without HASTE, you will probably apply paint more economically. The word "probably," in the clue, is an understatement regarding waste.
20. NEW not few. It is something NEW, rather, that can produce a distinct effect. The fact of having few channels of activity would be more in the nature of a basic situation.

SOAP OPERA SCENE

Lezlie Glows in Light

By STEVEN H. SCHEUER

NEW YORK — Ever since the age of nine, when she saw Maureen O'Hara make a flamboyant entrance into a seedy nightclub in the movie "Fire Over Africa," Lezlie Dalton knew she wanted to be an actress.

The realization dawned on her in Boston, Mass., and, though it took some years to achieve her goal, Lezlie never doubted that she would someday make exciting entrances and exits herself. TV soap fans have been aware of Lezlie as Elizabeth Spaulding in Guiding Light for the past seven months.

The producers of the series are very pleased with both Lezlie and Christopher Bernau (he plays Alan Spaulding) since the elegant couple arrived in Springfield. The attractive pair have added sparks to the storyline.

Lezlie started out as a member of The Golddiggers, the sexy singer-dancers associated with Dean Martin and Bob Hope. After 18 months of "golddigging" for a living, Lezlie had saved enough to settle down and study acting with a good coach. She kept her hand in by doing episodic TV and even had a short term as Jaimie Lyn Bauer's temporary replacement in "The Young and the Restless."

When she felt she was ready, Lezlie headed for New York and knocked on doors and haunted agent offices until she landed the plum role of Elizabeth Spaulding in "Guiding Light."

Unlike some other soap stars who put down the daytime serials, Lezlie believes there's a great deal to be learned from appearing in the afternoon dramas. However, to lend depth to her acting technique, she never stops studying scenes from Shakespeare, Chekhov and Tennessee Williams.

Lezlie hopes to make films and more stage work her next career goal and so far, she hasn't missed getting what she goes after.

Best Daytime Serial: All My Children (ABC); Days of Our Lives (NBC); Ryan's Hope (ABC); The Young and the Restless (CBS).

Best Actor: Matthew Cowles (Billy Clyde in All My Children); Larry Keith (Nick Davis in All My Children); Michael Levin (Jack Fenelli in Ryan's Hope); James Pritchett (Dr. Matt Powers in The Doctors); Andrew Robinson (Frank Ryan in Ryan's Hope); Michael Storm (Larry Wolek in One Life to Live).

Lezlie Daton has caught on with fans in her role as Elizabeth Spaulding in Guiding Light; Stephen Yates, of the same show, plays Ben McFarren enjoying a honeymoon in the Bahamas.

Channel Chatter: Fans of "Guiding Light" will be treated to gorgeous on-location scenery of Nassau in the Bahamas when Ben McFarren (Stephen Yates) and his wife Eve (Janet Grey) enjoy an idyllic honeymoon amid the blooming flora of the tropics . . . Janet Grey and Kate Wilkinson (who played Janet's mother in "Guiding Light") have combined talents in preparing broadcasts to be presented on the special network of radio for the blind . . . Agnes Nixon, creator of "All My Children," was on hand recently on the Mike Douglas Show to pick up an award for the soap, which was named the Best Daytime Serial in a magazine's annual readers' poll . . . Lloyd Battista (Ray Slater in "Love of Life") has done the voice-overs for the trailer and the TV commercials of the new movie, "The Greek Tycoon." Lloyd has dubbed his voice for such actors as Marcello Mastroianni, Yves Montand and Giancarlo Giannini . . . For the statisticians among you — based on a February Nielsen report, an average of more than 8 million viewers watch each of the 14 network soaps, with 5,900,000 homes represented.

Plot Portents: Newcomers are taking hold on "The Young and the Restless." Housewife Linda faces overtures from her new boss, Jeffrey, and Casey Reed's teenaged sister has an eye for Greg. As for Casey herself, the young resident doctor looks ripe for Snapper, but the man isn't having any.

With Donna about, the loving relationship between Marlena and Don is in jeopardy on "Days of Our Lives." Will Mike go through with the marriage to Margo? More battles are ahead for Chris and Mary, a couple unable to change their ways or each other.

On "One Life to Live," the terrorists turn Jim loose because he's dying, but not before they get their hands on Joe Riley as a substitute hostage.

Christina is finally released from prison thanks to the expert detective work of Jeff Martin, who's obviously very much in love with the lady in "All My Children." Is that the peal of wedding bells we hear in the distance?

John Hearn's Collectibles

Let's talk about prints — but first you will need a magnifying glass. Agreed, everything which was not originally directly rendered by hand but was produced by some kind of mechanical device is a print, but 99 per cent of all reproductions were made by photographic process and, beautiful though some of them may be, they are not regarded as "prints" from a collecting point of view; neither are they particularly valuable.

A "print" is something made by some non-photographic process such as lithography, woodcut, etching, mezzotint, etc. It requires direct involvement by the artist and editions tend to be authentically "limited."

You do not have to be an expert to tell a print from a photo-reproduction. If it was made before 1880 it can only be a print because photo processing did not exist before then. If it was made after 1900 the odds are heavily in favour of it being a photo.

When I refer to old prints as limited editions it needs to be remembered that all illustrations in all books before 1880 were prints. The edition may therefore have been limited but the numbers could be considerable. It is possible to run hundreds of thousands of copies off a woodcut — but the survival rate of paper is not great and surviving specimens can be quite rare. Equally obviously vast numbers of old books, magazines and newspapers illustrated before 1880 are still with us and they are not necessarily valuable because of that. It is, however, a factor, and old books containing original prints tend to be more sought after than those without.

Collectibility of old prints falls under two main headings — artistic merit and historical interest. The first is a platitude. Good art is always treasured regardless of its age. Contemporary artists make prints and sell them for a great deal of money if they are any good. At a recent show by Canadian artist, Ken Danby, his latest prints were snapped up for some hundreds of dollars. This is not because they were prints but because they are Ken Danby's.

If you are interested in old art prints, have fun. You will need a great deal of money and an even greater expertise. The potential profits are huge.

Historical prints are another matter altogether. Here we have a direct comparison with old books. Old works of fiction are hardly ever of any value.

Non-fiction is almost always of value. It remains a permanent record of what was regarded as knowledge at that time. Travel books in particular record the state of a world which we shall never know again and the personal observations of travellers are priceless.

W. H. Bartlett is perhaps the best know of the traveller illustrators — a man with a miraculous eye and a superb artist.

I started off by saying you need a magnifying glass. When in doubt, examine your "print." If close up it appears as rows of perfectly even, symmetrical dots, it is a photo-reproduction. If it shows up as irregular short lines and dashes, it is a print.

Networks Battle

The most promising of the comedies is "Grandpa Goes to Washington," mainly because it will star Jack Albertson. He impersonates a college professor who ends his enforced retirement by running for the U.S. Senate.

There are a pair of crime series — one is "Sword of Justice," which NBC describes as "a high-style modern-day swashbuckling adventure in the tradition of 'Zorro' and 'Count of Monte Cristo,' with the added element of humor."

Also in that category is "Capra," a whodunit with famous guest stars each week that sets up clues and suspects and lets the audience as well as the "dynamic anti-establishment lawyer" hero try to solve the crime. Might be fun.

NBC will try long-form drama with "W.E.B.," that seems a cross between "Executive Suite" and the movie "Network." The show, narrating the trials of a woman executive in the cutthroat world of network television," is the brainchild of Lin Bolen, former NBC vice president for daytime programing.

There also is "Live from Hollywood with Dick Clark," an hour a live television that will include a hodgepodge of variety turns, gossip, whatever.

NBC evinces disappointing caution in its news magazine show. Instead of turning monthly late night "Weekend" into prime time "Midweek," the network will go prime time monthly with "Weekend" until December, when the show is scheduled to go weekly, Fred Silverman willing.

CBS has gathered a great cast for its movie "Getting Married," to air May 17, 9-11 p.m., Eastern time.

There's Richard Thomas (otherwise John-Boy Walton) as the shy young lover madly courting Bess Armstrong ("On Our Own"), television news anchorwoman, who plans to marry Mark Harmon ("Sam"). Others include Dena Dietrich ("It's not nice to fool Mother Nature"), Fabian (the singer), Katherine Helmond (Jessica of "Soap"), Mimi Kennedy ("3 Girls 3"), Audra Lindley ("Three's Company"), Vic Tayback ("Alice"), and Van Johnson (needs no special credits).

That's the cast — where's the script?

Edwards Returning to TV

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Vince Edwards, who established himself in the hearts of viewers as the glowering, domineering Dr. Ben Casey a dozen years ago, is returning to TV as a glowering, domineering Air Force colonel.

Edwards has been a relative stranger to the tube in the interim. He did star in a second series, "Matt Lincoln," which bombed so badly he was loathe to try again. The networks, too, were reluciant to encourage a third effort.

The barrel-chested actor, who, with Jack Klugman and Walter Matthau, ranks among the great racehorse players in Hollywood, spent uncounted days at Santa Anita and Hollywood Park betting the bangtails.

Edwards draws a distinction between himself and Matthau, saying, "Walter likes to lose. I don't. I'm out there to win every bet."

Eventually the thrill of the track palled. The actor in Edwards needed work and producers weren't battering down his door.

"I stopped going to the track and found I just had too much time on my hands," Edwards said. "So I started writing. After all, I did some writing on 'Ben Casey' and I was an English literature major at Ohio State.

"Then I starred in the TV movie 'The Rhineman Exchange' playing a military officer. It turned out pretty well.

"I had breakfast a few days later with Deanne Barkley. She's an NBC vice president and a friend of mine. Deanne said I looked good in a military uniform and I should try to do more such parts.

"I asked what properties NBC had along those lines and she said nothing. So I decided to write my own vehicle."

Edwards fashioned a screen treatment titled "Joshua Tree," the name of a fictional California Air Force base closely patterned after Edwards Air Force Base, a key installation for training astronauts, testing new aircraft and training test pilots.

Edwards in The Courage and The Passion

He added intrigue, fictional characters and churned out what he calls a military version of "Payton Place." NBC liked the script and changed the title to "The Courage and The Passion" for reasons of its own.

It will be telecast Saturday May 27 at 9 p.m. on Channel 5 as a two-hour movie and a pilot show for an hourly weekly series if public response is as good, as the network hopes it will be.

"The whole idea was for dramatic stories set against an exciting background," Edwards said. "And I wanted a place we could use for locations that wasn't too far from Hollywood. Edwards Air Force Base is only 75 miles away.

"What could be more dangerous than the pressures and suspense of testing aircraft or the excitement of training astronauts? You have all the elements for life and death drama without unnecessary violence.

In addition to the military, Agajanian must deal with businessmen, scientists and politicians seeking power and advantageous deals.

"It's a pressure cooker of finance, testing, danger, women wanting to be astronauts, medical problems, personnel complications. There's no end to the kind of stories that can be turned out in this setting.

Edwards also wrote in a good part for his wife of 10 years, Linda Foster, who plays his girlfriend in the show. Edwards, however, insists that Linda won the part on her own merits, reading for the line producers.

Why, after so many years away from episodic television, does Vince Edwards hope to star in another series?

"I didn't want to do slave labor in somebody else's series as an actor," he said. "There's no financial future in that. But in this show I'm boss and there's money in that. I'm co-executive producer with Dave Gerber who produces 'Police Woman' and 'Police Story.'

"Odds are pretty good the show will become a series. As a long-shot player it's about time my numbers came up. I've been unlucky at the track but I figure I'll be lucky at NBC.

"If the show becomes a weekly series I'll be contributing story ideas. These days an actor has got to make things happen. He can't sit back and wait for the telephone to ring. I did that for years.

"Maybe if you get hot, stories and scripts are brought to you. If not, you just can't sit back and wait.

"The day of the passive performer is over. If you've got ideas you've got to take them to the marketplace and sell them.

"I've already completed a second project, 'Make Me Beautiful,' the story of a plastic surgeon who falls in love with a face he creates. I'll just produce and direct it and leave the doctor role to somebody else."

Edwards spent enough time in a doctor's tunic and, anyhow, he looks better in an Air Force uniform.

TV MAILBAG

By THOM MEAD

HOLLYWOOD — The TV mailbag:

Q. I would like to know what happened to the six sisters who sang on the "Lawrence Welk Show"? — D.H., Washington, Pa.

A. You are referring to the Samanski Sisters. According to a spokesperson for Welk, the sisters became homesick and asked to be released from the show. They returned to New Jersey and went back to school. The sisters left the Welk show after the sixth show this season.

Q. In watching the last show of the season of "Little House on the Prairie," we got the distinct impression that the show was coming to an end. Are they going to stop making "Little House"? We haven't heard anything but as I said, the show ended with everyone leaving town and Mary was still blind. — M.B., Kamloops, B.C.

A. You were just watching the last show of the season and not the final episode. "Little House" is one of NBC's most successful shows and will be back in the fall for another season.

Q. Please help me. I recall that there was a series many years ago which starred Clint Eastwood and Eric Fleming. It was a Western, but I can't remember the name of the show. — T.K., Marysville, Wash.

A. The weekly series was called "Rawhide" and it appeared on CBS between 1958 and 1966. Eastwood played Rowdy Yates and Flemming played Gil Favor.

Q. Is Tom Hayden, the husband of Jane Fonda, the son of actor Sterling Hayden? — D.S., San Francisco, Calif.

A. The two are not related.

Q. On the series "CHiPs," we see the motorcyle cops passing on the right and between cars. This is illegal in the state I live in. Are California laws different? — H.B.W., Jefferson City, Mo.

A. California law permits such action by the two motorcycle officers. You can bet everything done on the show, is legal, since two real California Highway Patrol officers provide technical assistance.

BOOKS

Pat Barclay

Back in the days when I felt like arguing with men about such things, I challenged a gentleman friend to a cooking contest. (Or maybe he challenged me. Who remembers? Who cares?) Anyway, the deal was that first I would cook a formal dinner to which he and both sets of parents would be invited; the following week would be his turn.

I can't recall, these many years later, a single item from my own menu. I do remember his, though, because it totally outclassed mine. The stuffed omelet was a triumph, the plastic worm in my salad bowl was a sensation, but the piece de resistance was something I've never seen bettered anywhere: mashed potatoes scultped into a lifelike replica of our pet bulldog, posed with head bent and eyes trained longingly on the miniature mashed potato bone between her front feet, and tinted a delicate brown by the oven. The damn thing even tasted good.

Come to think of it, that mashed potato bulldog is probably the reason I became a cookbook addict in the first place. If you can't beat 'em, you can at least pretend you're gathering up steam.

Whatever the subliminal motivation, intriguing volumes of a culinary nature do keep accumulating around the place, and I think today it's worth taking a look at some of them. Brian Kanee's How to Boil Water, for instance (Hurtig, $5.95), would make a dandy gift for any incipient potato-sculptors on your list. (Point out the recipe for Roast Suckling Pig on page 109 if you really want to settle someone's hash.)

Subtitled "A Bachelor's Guide to Cooking at Home," How to Boil Water is an efficiency expert's dream. "Utensils can be divided into two types, essential and beyond essential," it will say, or "One pound of frozen green or wax beans for six, based on one-third cup per person, and one pound of frozen carrots for six on the same basis, as with whole kernel corn and peas, also frozen. Cut this in half with frozen French fried potatoes." (If you can repeat this verbatim with your eyes shut, Kanee's your man.)

Non-efficiency experts may have trouble locating specific gems of Kaneean wisdom and the only word to describe his index is "terse," but How to Boil Water does contain many clever ideas. (Sample: Cope with Mongolian Hot Pot by using several fondue pots.) Definitely a must for the culinary exhibitionist.

Then there's Folk Festival Fare, from Peguis ($4). This one has the advantage of being both exotic and home-tested. A recipe for strudel is concerned to the point of supplying a folding diagram and the variety ranges from a recipe for ginger beer to a Ukrainian innovation dubbed the Uke-a-Bob. Twenty-one countries are represented in this book, which owes its existence to Winnipeg's annual Folklorama. I tried its version of Konigsberger Klopse the other night and it's a family favorite already. As for Jamaican Curried Goat — well, we're still thinking it over.

Mock Java is an unusual specialty booklet containing nine recipes for do-it-yourself coffee substitutes using roasted whole grains flavored with chicory, licorice and/or molasses. Mock Java was originally published by General Printers of Surrey, B.C., at $2, but is now a Bantam Book at $1.25. Bantam is reported to have purchased the rights to Mock Java for a five-figure sum, but so far I've not seen the new version. Maybe they had trouble translating the spirited Introduction ("The years of the Great Depression . . . perpetuated severe hardships on most people and were without doubt the cruellest years in Canadian history") into mass marketese.

Finally, as dedicated cookbook fans are doubtless aware, one of the best sources of good cooking ideas is the regional recipe collection, usually the work of a ladies' auxiliary to something or other and for sale wherever tourists are likely to turn up. I treasure Fat-Back and Mollasses, "favorite old recipes from Newfoundland and Labrador" published by the Rev. Ivan F. Jesperson of 6 Wishingwell Rd., St. John's ($3.75), as well as similar collections picked up in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick last summer. (From the Highlands and the Sea, Ingonish Women's Hospital Auxiliary, Ingonish, Cape Breton, N.S., $3; and The Humdinger Cook Book, Pythian Sisters, Hartland, N.B., $3, respectively. The Humdinger also throws in a priceless photo of the Pythian Sisters' kitchen band. Don't miss it.)

No matter that it's impossible to find any of their recipes because nobody associated with a ladies' auxiliary ever thinks of compiling an index. Just reading about all that delicious fresh fish is satisfaction enough.

Vidal's Sly Comedy of Modern Manners

By ANTHONY JENKINS

Gore Vidal is a joker in the pack: every year another book, another bag of tricks. A master manipulator, he demands alertness on the part of his readers. So it was with a what's-he-up-to-now feeling that I opened his latest novel.

Kalki is a sly comedy of modern manners. It manoeuvred me, at any rate, from extreme irritation to excitement and, finally, to a surprising sense of desolation.

The plot is an ingenious one. In the fastness of Nepal appears a figure who proclaims himself the incarnation of the Hindu god, Kalki. When he rides out on his white horse it will, according to legend, signal the end of the world. The streets of America blossom with Kalki's disciples urging people to purify themselves and giving away paper lotus blossoms which carry numbers for a weekly lottery.

Since nothing in our world can be for free, the managing editor of a national tabloid is curious about what lies behind this give-away. Kalki, it turns out, is really Jimmy Kelly, veteran of the Vietnam war, crack bio-chemist and known drug-peddler.

Hoping to scoop CBS' Mike Wallace, the paper attempts to interview Kelly, only to be told that he will talk to no one but Teddy Ottinger, a famous woman test-pilot. Armed with a fat contract and a ghost-writer to doctor her reports, Teddy goes off to Katmandu with instructions to find out if the lotus-lark is a front for the drug racket or whether in fact the suspected drug connection is a front for something genuine. How nigh is the end of the world?

The story which follows is Teddy's own account. By about page three I'd said to myself this is not a woman speaking. A sexist thought (I then said): these days who's to say how women talk or think? One up to Vidal, for later in the book it becomes clear that the jabbing, prosy narrative is a spoof of the liberated who-says-a-woman's-any-different-from-a-man type of book. Teddy, you'll recall, is an aviatrix:

"I have no fear of flying, to make the obvious play on the title of a typical woman's book of the seventies . . . I cannot use the tricks of my sisters. They were interested in freeing themselves of the stereotypes of Jewish princessdom, which they confused with all womanhood. This is not unnatural. We start with ourselves. We have no choice. But then we move out. They started with themselves and did not move at all."

Teddy's narrative does eventually expand, but it takes some time to see this. Initially her style is flat-footed, a flimsy vehicle for Vidal's predictable thrusts at government corruption, President Carter, the CIA and a host of other trendy targets. These first chapters are mass-produced plastic. The sentences seem to have interchangeable parts, in the idiom of North America's disposable consumer society.

GORE VIDAL . . . humor at its cruellest

Teddy is not flesh and blood at all. Her name (an elision of Otto Preminger) is not the only sign of her celluloid qualities. The fact that she is bi-sexual and has written (with professional help) a book called Beyond Motherhood is simply a device to allow Vidal into the arena of today's sexual politics.

Vidal uses Teddy's struggles with her style and with the teachings of her former ghost-writer, who could always be relied upon to supply the right cliche, to deliver his own satiric barbs at contemporary life. They bristle over the surface, instant one-liners. The barbs grow so frequent that they become tiresome, like someone nagging at your ribs (nudge, nudge, say no more). If this were not deliberate it would be merely banal.

But about halfway through the novel the style begins to broaden out into an exciting political drama. Teddy's commentary grows less frenziedly hip as she describes Kalki's arrival in America to proclaim The End. Her descriptions fill out to transport our imaginations to New York at the end of the seventies: crime-ridden, polluted and manic:

"We sat for a moment on a bench next to a green bronze statue, streaked with pigeon droppings. A pale sun tried but failed to burn its way through the brown haze. On the next bench, a white man was shoving a dirty hypodermic needle into a shiny swollen blue and red ankle. Nobody paid attention.

"We watched beyond horror, the parade of monsters. Drunk, drugged, mad, they staggered past us, talking to themselves. I thought it very apt that on a building opposite us was one of the KALKI, THE END billboards. I could not imagine any of these people wanting to go on."

Vidal shapes this section of his book within the conventions of the disaster thriller. The suspense builds towards a rally in Madison Square Garden where Kalki intends to divulge the date on which the age of iron will come to a universal close.

Recognizing those patterns, one comes to expect some last-minute turnabout, a sheering away from the ultimate disaster at the peak moment of tension. Vidal plays us along to engineer a gripping and explosive red herring before the final crunch:

"There was no one in that audience who did not know that when Kalki mounted the white horse the world was supposed to end. Waves of emotion — not to mention sound — flooded the auditorium. There was horror. There was . . . expectation? Hard to say. Things happened too quickly."

Only during the long coda after the novel's climax does the book unravel into a glorious put-on. Confronted with the possible annihilation of the world, we begin to see that our present culture is indeed disposable. The famous and notorious whom Vidal enjoys lambasting are but straws in the wind. It seems Vidal's biggest joke is at the expense of his own reputation as a writer who delights to flurry the dovecots of the in-people. They are hardly worth the effort.

There's some point, then, behind the earlier sequence of Teddy's banalities and Vidal's facile jokes. We are used to a vision of life on earth in terms of syntax: in the beginning was the Word. But as civilization totters toward ruin, our words become devalued, run loose. "There were no images. For us, there was nothing graven except, most dangerous of all, the word." All that's vital are broken bits from the ancient philosophers to which Teddy is allowed to cling.

Yet if we blame mankind for fouling the Word and the World, we can also seek consolation in the good things of civilization, its monuments of science and art. Vidal dangles this placebo in front of us for a time as his characters tour the universe to bring back the Mona Lisa or a piece of intricately carved Imperial jade. On a more mundane level there are good things to be had from Bergdorf's or Saks 5th Avenue. But these too are exposed eventually as transient toys.

Finally we are even denied the consolation of caring for these characters as individuals. The usual end-of-the-world tale allows us to associate with its major figures, urging their survival. Vidal's choice of narrator strips away the illusion of reality from the outset of the novel, keeping us detached until it is too late to become involved.

This is comedy at its cruelest and at its most refined. Vidal leaves us without a shred of sentiment to hide behind, and this is a far more effective critique than any heartfelt fulmination against the way-we-live-now. Kalki is a tricksy, daring novel, but it works.

The 'Canadization' of a Country

By JULIAN REID

European financiers have a word for a country that has lost control of its economy to foreign interests. With knowing irony, they say it has been "canadized."

As it happens, they are increasingly in a position to know what they're talking about. Natives who worry about the ongoing "canadization" of Canada are mostly inclined to look south of the border when seeking out the villains of the piece. Yet today it is more and more the European-controlled multinational conglomerates that are pulling the strings of our hapless national economy.

Where are they leading us? What are the long-term consequences of this largely unheralded shift? In all probability, no-one knows. For by its very nature, the ongoing expatriation of our national birthright is a secretive and little-publicized affair — so much so that even the investors and financiers responsible for it probably possess only a limited understanding of what is really going on.

As for the ordinary concerned citizen, he must do what he can to extrapolate from the few sources available to him. Government statistics are of only limited use, if only because the federal government is almost as deeply implicated in the ongoing sell-out as are the chartered banks and the select few Canadian members of the international corporate elite. And the few unofficial studies available are inevitably both fragmentary and partial, though the best of them are none the less illuminating for that.

This is why Henry Aubin's City for Sale deserves to rank as one of the most important books that you, as a Canadian, are likely to read this year — even though its subject-matter, the overall pattern of land-ownership and property-development in the Montreal urban area, may at first sight seem of little interest to the average Victorian.

The author is a corporate investigative reporter, formerly on the staff of the Washington Post but now working for the Montreal Gazette, where the core of the present book originally appeared as a series of feature articles in 1976. His study grew out of two years of systematic probing into the murky waters of urban and international finance, including visits to six foreign countries and interviews with over 400 persons, ranging from junior functionaries to such influential figures as Edmund de Rothschild, banker extraordinary.

Montreal skyline . . . caught in 'international mesh of finance capital'

In other words, Aubin has done his homework. And the result is perhaps the most revealing analysis yet published of the forces underlying urban development in contemporary Canada. Nor, as the author points out, is the relevance of his findings limited to this country, for the same pattern of increasing multinational predominance characterizes metropolitan growth throughout the non-Communist world.

In brief, City for Sale demonstrates that, over the past decade, development in Montreal has fallen almost entirely into the hands of what Aubin aptly characterizes as "an international mesh of finance captial which dominates key sectors of the international economy" — a select corporate oligarchy that is increasingly the effective ruler of the world. In this invisible web, the interests of no one nation predominate. And its agents have shown themselves consistently able to either evade or minimize any form of public accountability to local authorities in any corner of their far-flung commercial empire.

In Canada, moreover, they have been consistently aided and abetted by governments on all levels — not to mention those most powerful of all internal forces in our economy, the five great chartered banks, who are the chief source of funding for this colossal takeover.

The implications are devastating. "What it boils down to," Aubin points out, "is that Canada is selling its own land to foreigners who are paying for it with Canada's own money" — and then applying the proceeds to the furtherance of their own interests rather than ours. And they are doing so with the tacit endorsement, and often the direct support, of our own elected representatives.

This process is not limited to Montreal. For the same trends are in evidence in many other Canadian cities — in Vancouver, for one, as Donald Gutstein's 1975 study, Vancouver Ltd., amply corroborates.

And everywhere — both in Canada and elsewhere — the consequences are more or less the same. An unco-ordinated proliferation of uniformly unsightly high-rises and glass-encased office-blocks, callously dehumanized monuments to the favored style of multinational-sponsored architecture, urban growth-patterns that are shamelessly wasteful of both land and energy, for, as Aubin documents, there is an intensely incestuous interlocking between the major urban development interests and the energy and automobile industries. Mounting indebtedness at all levels. And rampant inflation, too — for, according to economist Barbara Ward, property-speculation is the chief inflationary factor in modern industrial economies; and the multinational investment interests are nothing if not speculative, jacking up prices unmercifully and unrelentingly in a truly dizzying display of financial sleight-of-hand.

In other words, urbanites throughout Canada are all more or less in the same position as the unfortunate citizens of Montreal — citizens who now find themselves, as Aubin puts it, "disenfranchized from their own city. It no longer belongs to them or even to people whom they know or can identify. It is a community shaped most by the anonymous, the absent, and the unaccountable" — non-resident investors concerned only with lining their own pockets and unconcered with the local impact of their activities.

This, then, is the real significance of the process the Europeans describe as "canadization." Over the last decade, we Canadians — or, rather, the officials of the political and commercial institutions to whom we have entrusted our collective economic destiny — have cheerfully sold our birthright for a mess of highrises.

Canadians Talk About Their Separation Complex

By WALT KELLYTHORNE

Conversations with Canadians these days inevitably include the topic of separatism; and just as inevitably, John Aitken discovered, it's not only Quebec that can state a case for leaving the country.

In British Columbia — whose inhabitants Aitken characterizes as "eccentric, oddly defensive and even chauvinistic about their province" — the Committee for Western Independence and the Western Canada Party sound the separatist ideal; in Alberta it's the Western National Association. More than 10,000 Ontarians support the Northern Ontario Heritage Party, and in the Maritimes a chronic despair is forcing its citizens to re-examine, as so many times before, their place in the Canadian confederation.

The roots of that destruction, the people he spoke to on his coast-to-coast journey agree, lie in the very base of Confederation itself. "National unity," they believe, is simply the fancy name for a system by which a very small group of Ontario and Quebec politicians and their owners exploit the rest of us.

As a Nova Scotian said, people "are bone-weary of paying through the nose to support our fat and parasitic brethren in the Montreal-Sarnia fertile crescent."

A Calgary man confirms that view: he discovered long ago that "the only reason we existed as a nation was to benefit Ontario and Quebec ... it's simply a convenience."

British Columbians are fed up with federal tariffs which force them to pay more than world market prices for goods they should logically expect to save on, like cars from Japan. They point, also, to botched federal transport policies which forced prices up 85 per cent in some northern coastal areas recently.

In Alberta the federal export tax on oil prohibits that province from selling its oil competitively in Canada, and few if any measures are being taken now to ensure a solid economy for the area when the oil runs out.

In northern Ontario mining companies ship their ore for processing in Norway and the U.S. in direct contravention of the law. Ed Deibel, the founder of the Northern Ontario Heritage Party, estimates that over $720 billion has been lost in missed refining potential in the last three years alone. Policies that affect the region are made by bureaucrats too far away to really care, he says.

Deibel points out, too, that the BNA Act doesn't deny any region's right to leave the confederation.

"What Quebec has done," Deibel believes, "is show a lot of people there is something you can do."

James P. McKiven, an economist, seemed to sum up best our situation, our identity (brave words!) as a people:

"If there's anything distinctive about Canadians," he told Aitken, "it's their ability to divide themselves into ever smaller groups."

Until, perhaps, they disappear.

If the present feeling for separatism continues, Aitken thinks, what's left of Canada will be absorbed into the United States.

"They don't need or want us," he writes. "They will feel forced to take us for their own security."

The end result is that none of us "will maintain culture or independence for long."

For now, at least, Canadians are very much with us, thanks to John Aitken's Conversations with them. And the land, too, is still with us — not the postcard land or the Group of Seven land, but a land of claustrophobic buses, highway burger palaces and cavernous beer parlors jammed with people eager to talk about themselves and the strange place we all share.

Whether we continue sharing that place or not, Conversations helps keep the channels of communication open; and as long as dialogue lasts, an equitable settlement of our disunity may perhaps be found.

E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Gnomes: You must be willing to swallow the bait and suspend disbelief

I have some good Dutch-Canadian friends to thank for introducing me to the work of Dutch artist Rien Poortvliet. Several months ago they loaned me his book about farm life in Holland, a book containing hundreds of line and wash drawings with captions in facsimile script. There was no text because the marvellously exact drawings depicting every conceivable work and leisure activity on the farm and in the village were so explicit that a text would have been superfluous.

Encouraged by my enthusiastic response, the same valued friends recently brought me Poortvliet's latest book before they had fully explored it themselves. This book was concerned with gnomes and in addition to captions it also had a fairly lengthy text by the artist's scientist friend Wil Huygen. Unfortunately, it was in Dutch, a language almost totally incompehensible to me, so it left me frustrated.

But now an English translation of this work has appeared and, at last, I can share my delight in Poortvliet with you.

The gnome book is enormous fun because Poortvliet has treated his subject as Audubon might have dealt with a new species of bird, portraying in great detail the appearance of both sexes, as well as the young, their chief characteristics, home-building techniques, habitat and movement patterns.

The take-off of the scientific approach is so well done that even the most sophisticated reader will willingly allow himself to be tricked into believing the invented factual data.

Do you remember that charmingly dramatic scene in Peter Pan when the fairy Tinkerbelle is dying and Peter earnestly pleads with the audience to believe? "If you truly believe," he says, "she will live." When the audience roars its collective belief the miracle occurs. It's in that spirit one should regard this book.

Actually, it's not difficult. When Poortvliet and Huygen inform us, with straight faces, that they have observed gnomes for 20 years and that theirs is the first work of consequence on the subject to be published since Wunderlich's bulky and dubious treatise De Hominibus Parvisimis appeared in 1580, one is more than willing to swallow the bait and suspend disbelief. So, without further ado, let's do just that.

This first documentary portrayal of gnomes immediately makes clear that gnomes, though resembling humans, are a distinct species, not to be confused with goblins, trolls, kobolds, fairies, elves and leprechauns, none of which of course exist in reality. Gnomes used to be accepted members of society in Europe, Russia and Siberia. As benevolent allies of wild animals (and homo sapiens as well for that matter) their frequent appearance was regarded as normal.

Their disappearance coincided with the pollution of air and water and the destruction of virgin forests. With the current awareness of the need to maintain an ecological balance, there is hope that gnomes will emerge from the hidden corners, above and below ground, to which they were forced to retreat. Concerned nature-lovers — those who truly believe — will undoubtedly meet gnomes.

And when they do it will probably be the wizened, ruddy-cheeked, grey-bearded males of the species who, according to Poortvliet, weigh less than one pound and stand six inches high, without their distinctive peaked red caps. Females are rarely seen because they seldom leave their homes.

Gnomes live to a great age, 400 years being the average life-span. Physiologically, they are far superior to man. The eye is designed for sharp night vision, ear auricles can be pointed in any direction and revolved, sense of smell is 19 times more acute than man's, and their muscular system permits them to run faster, jump higher, and have seven times the strength of man, relatively speaking of course. They also possess extrasensory perception.

Poortvliet's full color pictures and captions describe in vivid detail every aspect of the gnome, from the fact that they always rub noses in greeting and farewell, that couples always have twin children, and that they can cure any ailment with medicinal herbs, to the routine nightly round of the male gnome as he gathers food and kindling, forages for animal hair for clothing, works in a gnome foundry or glasswork factory and of course assists animals in distress, such as disentangling a deer's antlers from barbed wire.

Although there are believed to be isolated colonies of gnomes in Canada, it is Europe where they mostly exist, having a geographical range extending from western Ireland to Siberia and from Norway south to the Balkans and the Caucasus. Most common are the woodland gnomes and most of the book is devoted to them.

According to my Dutch-Canadian friends these small industrious beings spend their lives above ground and they are not too happy with Poortvliet for inventing a complx underground existence resembling man's with elaborate homes, complete with sewers, bathrooms, portraits, and even cuckoo clocks. This, they complain, is anthropomorphizing to a ridiculous degree.

I cannot agree. When an artist like Poortvliet, with his delicious sense of humor, decides to allow his imagination to run riot, then anything goes and most people will be as intrigued by the domestic scene as they will enjoy being faintly shocked by the artist's occasional ribaldry.

This is one of those rare books that can be enjoyed by people of all ages. Unfortunately, it just misses the classic category because the quality of the text falls short of that of the illustrations. Rien Poortvliet was inspired; Wil Huygen lacked the necessary child-like belief, like that possessed by Scandanavian author Axel Munthe, who pitied people who had never seen a gnome.

Huygen's contribution ranges from descriptions of the gnome as craftsman to the writing of gnome legends. The former are couched in dull text-book style, and the latter lacks the inspirational touch that comes only with sincerity and which is essential when writing stories of this kind.

However, don't allow that to put you off. Huygen's text is a kind of bonus offering or dessert course. It's Poortvliet's book and in it he gives full rein to his talent for portraying anything and everything with scrupulous accuracy and, above all, with a communicative joyousness which may well be unique.

The Logger Poet Who Knows His Stuff

By CHARLES LILLARD

The trouble with most logging poets is that they write about logging.

It's an occupational hazard. In the bush the logger talks about what he did in town. Back in town he talks logging. There's nothing new about this; I'm sure it's been this way ever since the first logs were driven down the rivers of Maine and New Brunswick. Talking about logging is habit-forming, as anyone who has worked in a camp will admit. But there is a great difference between telling tall tales and the written word. Because so many writers have ignored this difference, this is the primary reason for so much bad logging literature.

The literary audience is not captive. They aren't waiting for someone to finish his story so they can tell their own. Robert Swanson was the first B.C. logging poet to make this important transition, but few people today would bother to read his Robert Service-like ballads. They are too sentimental for contemporary tastes. Closer to our liking today is the work of Roderick Haig-Brown, who once logged, then wrote about it, before he went on to become known for other reasons. Now, somewhere between Swanson and Haig-Brown, Peter Trower is carving a literary niche for himself.

According to the blurb on the back of Trower's latest book, Ragged Horizons, he is "a poet of tough towns, mean streets, camps, docks, pubs, and the pull of beauty — natural or human." This is one good reason for reading Trower, and it will certainly interest those young readers and writers who see logging as the last he-man job in the world. Another reason will be found in Al Purdy's Introduction to the book: "I've been a booster of Trower from that time on — along with John Newlove and a few others also aware that here is a poet worth knowing . . . a man with some fierce drive for excellence and success that he has harnessed to writing."

. . . carving a niche

Regrettably much of what Purdy has to say is hidden between stories of Trower's drinking prowess, Trower's living prowess and, naturally, I guess, Purdy's ability to keep up with Trower. Purdy never gets around to explaining what all of this has to do with Peter Trower's poetry.

There are some very good reasons for reading Trower. His is an authentic voice. He knows what he is talking about; unlike many "working class poets" Trower is not a tenured professor in some university. He was a logger, among other things, for some 30 years. And, while I'm doubful about some of the things that he glorifies, he is telling the truth — and that's a rare commodity in the sanctified air of modern poetry. He knows what he has seen, and he gives us the truth, as in "The Last Handfallers": "They're coming up the trail,/big blueriver hands/cramped from decades/of tyrannical wooden handles/of gnawing the big ones down/the hard way/of hearing the undercut timber cry/as it grudgingly gives."

In "The Alders" he catches both a sense of desolation and the alder as "encroacher": "The alders are the reoccupiers/they come easily/and quick into skinned land/rising like an ambush on raked ridges/jabbing like whiskers up through the washed-out/faces of never-used roads."

It is this type of writing which makes Trower outstanding. Sure, he's a poet of "mean streets," but he's continually rising above his subject matter. At his best he becomes lyrical: "Be still love, the ghost moves in me again —/the whatever —/the itch without a name./It has woken like a fox/in the dumb passages/to make me make music in the ashen time."

Ragged Horizons is a curious mixture of macho-logger, who all too often seems to be riding on his uppers, and the almost devout lyricist forced into song by love or his surroundings. Throughout the book there is a sense that the author is paying homage to time: the good times, the bad, and the people and places that filled Trower's time. There is also a growing awareness of time's fidelity: "Except in such backwaters/as this overlooked hotel/they have not yet erased —/here where a window called my bluff/I talk abstractedly with phantoms,/am uneasily at peace."

When I finished this collection, made up of new poems and work which has appeared in his three earlier collections, I felt that Trower really is "uneasily at peace." He has said a few things that have been on his mind for years, and said them very well. It will be interesting to see where he goes from here. Ragged Horizons is, no matter what direction Trower may take in the future, a very valid addition to anyone's library. If, as some claim, there is really a school of labor poetry in Canada, then Trower has set some high standards with this book.
